percent unemployment figures released Friday as examples of Martin's success.

But Wells said Martin is "taking credit for a lot of jobs brought here by previous administrations" and noted that "(former Democratic Gov.) Jim Hunt laid the groundwork for the I-40 project."

With so many issues dividing the candidates, both campaigns expect to spend about $5 million getting their message out. "We have a good strong Democrat and a good strong Republican . . . we know it's going to be a tight race," Merritt said.

The campaigns also expect to hold several debates between now and the election to give voters a chance to see the differences between the two men.

Debates were the order of the day Saturday when the candidates for lieutenant governor faced off in South Carolina, the first of several such meetings that have been scheduled by Democratic candidate Sen. Tony Rand and Republican candidate Jim Gardner.

Gardner's campaign director, Paul Richardson, said the campaign will focus on Rand's performance in the N.C. General Assembly during the campaign.

Rand's campaign could not be reached for comment.

In the Fourth District U.S. House of Representatives congressional race, first-term Democratic congressman David Price will be up for reelection against Republican Tom Fetzer.

Contributing to the tension of the campaign is the fact that the Fourth District seat has changed hands in each of the last three elections. "It'll be a very volatile election," said Mike Davis, Price's campaign manager.

Bob Harris, Fetzer's communications director, characterized his campaign's chances as excellent, noting that of all the challengers in the 435 congressional races this year, Fetzer's campaign ranked seventh in fund raising. He said Fetzer would be a more independent congressman and cited four times Price had voted for legislation which raised taxes.

But Davis said Price isn't vulnerable on taxes, saying the tax hike

Harris was referring to was the Budget Reconciliation Act supported by President Reagan.

"Dave Price is an effective, pragmatic congressman who is working hard for the district and the country," Davis said. Price was also the only first-term congressman to have major legislation pass the House (referring to the Home Equity Loan Consumer Protection Act which passed the House earlier this year), he said.

received the report by Monday afternoon, said police planner Jane Cousins.

Without finding anything in his blood and with no witnesses found, the cause of death may never be known. Mantey apparently fell out of a ninth-floor lounge, but there were other parties in the building at the time and students said they had only seen him earlier in the evening. Mantey died from injuries from the fall.

At the memorial service for him, Mantey's girlfriend, Jackie Moore, said mushrooms may have caused his death. Mantey, she said, was an intelligent man who was very curious about mushrooms and had been studying the effects of drugs. Her friends said later that she told people about the possibility to warn them away from the drugs.

Mantey, a senior from Wilmington, was to have graduated in May and gone to medical school at Wake Forest University on a scholarship. He was also a few weeks away from being inducted into the Phi Beta Kappa honor society before his death.

Police said after a preliminary investigation in March that there was no reason to suspect foul play or suicide.
