

"I'm making good money, and it's cool to be in Chapel Hill for the summer with all my friends." That is why Scott Friberg, a junior education major from Raleigh (second and fourth photo from left) chose to be a student painter for the University during the summer. Chris Stonehouse, a junior business major from Winston Salem (first photo from left) took the job to earn money this summer, but also to "get out of my parents' hair." In the third photo from the left, Tom Krueger, a junior radio, television and motion pictures major from Chapel Hill, and Julius Toomer from Chapel Hill clean up after a day of painting Kenan dormitory on North Campus. Tom Fitzsimmons from Concord, Calif., puts on the painting mask (fifth and sixth photos from left) to learn how to power spray a room in Avery dormitory on mid-campus.
