Experience should help Ross' Jackets get out of ACC cellar

 By ANDREW PODOLSKY
Assistant Sports Editor

The Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets still ache from last year's 2-9 season. They experienced their first winless ACC season since joining the league in 1979 and had everything bad happen to them, including injuries, ineligibilities and a lack of depth.

But coach Bobby Ross is ready to start his second year with a clean slate.

"Last year was a frustrating season for all of us," Ross said. "It started to snowball. What we've attempted to do is build from that and have a good spring. We're not world-beaters yet, but we're going to be better."

The term "rebuilding year" comes readily to mind, but Tech has the punch to surprise some people. Granted, they have little overall speed and won't be vying for the conference title in late November. But a six-win season is highly possible.

With seven freshmen and sophomores in the starting 22 and 14 starters returning, the team will have a much-needed new look.

"We will be playing a lot of redshirt freshmen," Ross said, "and they will be playing major roles for us."

That comment may answer one of the season's biggest questions: Who will play quarterback?

Possibilities include senior Todd Rampley, Mike Rhodes and Scott Aldridge, but redshirt freshman Lee Williamson has looked good in practice and will likely take over.

The Jackets' offense, which averaged a hefty 33 passes per game in '87, returns seven starters. The Atlanta skyline will likely be filled with flying footballs again this year as both starting receivers return.

Greg Lester, The Sporting News' top freshman receiver last year (33 catches, 593 yards), is back, along with Steve Davenport (29 catches, 5 TDs). Alonzo Watson or Jim Gallagher will be at tight end, taking the place of Chris Caudle, who died in a tragic boating accident in May.

But even if they can't pass, the Jackets can definitely run. Jerry Mays, the 1985 ACC Rookie of the Year, is back after missing 1987 with an injury. Alphanzo Thomas (339 yards) and Duke transfer T.J. Edwards may see a lot of action, too. Sophomore Stefan Scotton returns at fullback.

But if this weak offense is to survive, it will have to lean on its strong offensive line, which has four starters back. Senior center Eric Bearden (6-2, 254), sophomore guard Joe Siffri (6-5, 280) and tackles Jessie

Tech 'backer Willis Crockett will lead an experienced defense

Marion (6-4, 273) and Darryl Jenkins (6-5, 283) will be joined by former starter Scott Beavers (6-4, 273).

The offense is slowly taking shape, but then, offense was never a problem. A larger concern is the 278 points the defense gave up last year. Ross remembers that figure, as do the seven returning defensive starters.

Two-year starter Willie Burks moved to nose guard, and he will be flanked by Sean Smith and either Chris Simmons or Jeremiah McClary. Anyone who gets past these guys will most definitely be stopped by a strong linebacking corps, the strongest point of this young team.

Willis Crockett and George Malone are on the outside, with Eric Thomas and probably Rod Stephens on inside. Each is great, but, more importantly, each is backed by second-stringers who are just as good. Injuries won't affect this midsection, which is the heart and soul of the team.

But a smart team will avoid all this trouble and shoot for the weak secondary. The secondary is experienced — experienced at getting their rear-ends burned, that is. (Remember UNC's big 1987 comeback, when Mark Maye threw for 406 yards and four touchdowns? Tech sure does).

Cedric Stallworth is fairly competent, and he will be joined by one of three newcomers. Jay Martin and Andre Thomas will roam the middle

Maryland headed for cellar

 By DAVE GLENN
Staff Writer

The Maryland Terrapins enter the 1988 season with only 10 starters returning from last year's 4-7 team. This year's schedule includes non-conference games against West Virginia, Syracuse and Penn State — all on the road. The Terps' top four players from last year are long gone.

Could this be the year that Maryland gets a taste of the ACC cellar? Second-year head coach Joe Krivak doesn't think so. "With our last two recruiting classes, we've brought in over 50 youngsters," Krivak said. "The key now is to build upon that. We have a lot of good young players in the program, and we also have good depth with upperclassmen at certain positions."

Yes, Joe, but the question is not how many players you have, it's how good those players are. If the end of last season is any indication, Maryland could be in real trouble. The Terps lost their final four games by a grand total of 57 points. Their new quarterback, junior Neil O'Donnell, started those four games and couldn't put them over the top.

Take away two of his favorite targets, tight end Ferrell Edmunds and wideout Azizuddin Abdur-Ra'oof, both of whom graduated to NFL careers, and O'Donnell might have to try Southern Bell to find an
