Oh, the Temptations!

The Start of Something Big

Zesty. Tasty. And oh, so good going down. Our appetizers are a snappy snack, a light lunch, or the terrific start of a terrific meal. So go ahead, give in to temptation.

6 Hold on to your wallets And your stomachs. The wholesome debauchery of the N.C. State Fair has been known to take a toll on both. From the midway to the goats and pigs, it's definitely a full day (or two) of entertainment. Who knows, this may be the year you actually win that giant furry banana.

3 The house that Vanderbilt built There could hardly be a better time to visit western North Carolina. But if the beauty of the mountains and the autumn leaves aren't enough to lure you west, the Biltmore house is a spectacle in itself.

3 Geeks make music too Big Black's Steve Albini ends his quest for human rhythms to back up his skinny white-boy self. The resulting Rapeman is more than just sleaze, it's quality sleaze.

4 Cruelty to animals? Which could be worse: roasting live midget chickens or making Elvira paste tassels to her breasts? Joe Bob checks out both, but seems to enjoy them equally. There oughta be a law.

5 Still alive and rocking D.C.'s Nighthawks have been on the road for years, but their roots-based music is still fresh. They'll be bringing their danceable sound to ArtsCenter Friday night.

5 The art of catching Z's If you have an easier time getting a parking place on campus in the middle of the day than getting 40 winks at night, you're not alone. This week's graffiti may not help, but maybe you can get a laugh on your way to bed.

8 News from the tube And we don't mean 6 o'clock. We mean the honest-to-goodness what's up with the networks' opening season news. Tune in to this week's Edited 4 TV for the real lowdown on the the belated fall premieres.

9 Stand up for comedy The story of two struggling stand-up comedians is the basis for Tom Hanks' latest hit, "Punchline." His performance is as good as "Big," but will audiences find his immaturity as attractive when he plays a real adult?

10 Big screen blues Avoid them with our handy movie listing. You'll never show up at the wrong theater at the right time or the right theater at the wrong time again. Of course, we can't vouch for the popcorn.

11 The fare for non-fairgoers If driving 25 miles to get turned upside down on a full stomach is not your idea of a good time, there's lots to do here at home. Don't miss out, check it out.
