Golfers wind up fall in style

By ERIC WAGNON
Staff Writer

North Carolina's women's golf team wrapped up their fall season finishing first among 17 teams at the Pat Bradley Invitational in Miami. The three-day tournament, held Oct. 30 - Nov. 1, featured highly-ranked Texas, Wake Forest, Miami and Kentucky.

The Lady Tar Heels, ranked 16th in the pre-season poll, managed to slip past the Texas Longhorns, who finished second, and third-place Wake Forest in capturing the victory. "It's a very big win. We've been close all year," coach Dot Gunnells said. "To win this one, it sort of ended up the season on a good note."

The squad opened the season with a second-place finish, hosting the Tar Heel Invitational Sept. 16-18. In the second tournament of the fall season, the Memphis State Invitational Oct. 2-4, the Lady Tar Heels finished second again. All-American senior Katie Peterson won the individual portion of the event with a tournament total of 220 strokes.

At the Lady Kat Invitational Oct. 14-16 at the University of Kentucky, senior Donna Andrews finished second individually, but the team could manage only a fifth-place overall finish.

The team saved its best finish for the last tournament of the fall season, the Pat Bradley Invitational. In addition to the overall team title, Peterson finished third and Andrews followed in a tie for fourth.

"We got three good scores in there," Gunnells said. "That's the exciting thing — plus winning, that's always fun. We were playing a really tough golf course."

The course in Miami had a computer difficulty rating of 74.4. This is a high rating when compared with a rating of 73.6 for Chapel Hill's Finley Golf Course.

Because of the momentum from the team's last win, Gunnells said she wished the Tar Heels could play another fall tournament. Instead, the team must carry that momentum through the winter until the spring schedule of five tournaments.

In the final individual results for the fall, Peterson led the team, shooting an average of 74.6 strokes per round. Andrews shot an average of 75.1 strokes per round, and senior Suzy McGuire finished with an average just four strokes behind Andrews.

Gunnells was particularly pleased with the play of freshmen Debbie Doniger of Greenwich, Conn., and Tara Hipp of Gaithersburg, Md., who played nine and six rounds, respectively, for UNC this fall. Along with Doniger and Hipp, sophomores Dayna Baird and Amber Marsh saw action at the number four and five slots.

Women's golf is not an ACC sport, so a computer rather than conference tournaments determines the participants in the spring NCAA tournament. Out of the 28 rounds in which each team is allowed to play, the 14 lowest rounds, adjusted for course difficulties, determine a team's NCAA fortunes. The top 17 teams are offered NCAA bids.

Field hockey goes for 'title'

By NEIL AMATO
Staff Writer

The North Carolina field hockey team, ranked second in the nation at 17-1, will play for the national championship this weekend in Norfolk, Va. The real Final Four is next weekend in Philadelphia, but the Tar Heels believe the winner of the South region will capture the NCAA title.

Coach Karen Shelton's reasoning is that the teams are paired geographically regardless of national rank. It just so happens that, besides No. 9 Maryland and UNC, the other team is top-ranked, 23-1 Old Dominion, the host of the regional tourney.

Shelton expressed her displeasure with the pairing system, but said her team will still be ready to play.

"I'm not surprised, but I'm a little disappointed," Shelton said of the regional matchups. "I was hoping it would work out differently. But we're not thinking, 'Oh, poor us.' We're preparing for this weekend as if it were the Final Four. If we can get by Maryland and play ODU, that will be, in effect, the national championship game."

Of course, the key to that plan is defeating Maryland, who North Carolina hooks up with Saturday at 7 p.m.

Although the Terrapins go into the tourney ranked ninth, the Tar Heels have victimized them twice by scores of 3-0, most recently at the ACC final in Charlottesville, Va.

Shelton is confident that the Tarps, the defending NCAA champs, will try some new approaches against her troops. "They're very well coached," Shelton said. "They know us quite well, but we know them very well, too. Their second game against us was better than the first. We're focusing our energy this week on Maryland. In the two times we've played them, we've neutralized their strength."

Maryland's strength, according to Shelton, lies in its three All-Americans — midfielder Kim Turner, forward Cheryl Rudio and sweeper Jessica Wilk.

"They are the nuts and bolts of their team," Shelton said. "We have put girls on them to mark them and take them out of the game. If we do that, we feel the rest of our team can handle the rest of their team."

If North Carolina gets by Maryland, they will square off against the top-ranked Lady Monarchs. Both squads have given each other their only losses. Early in the season, ODU crushed a flat Tar Heel team 4-0 in Chapel Hill. On Oct. 23, UNC got a little revenge, nipping Old Dominion 3-2 in Norfolk.

The only Tar Heel with a major injury is senior co-captain Tracey Yurgin, who has an inflammation in her foot. But Shelton isn't worried. After all, Yurgin, an All-American at sweeper, has started every game in her career.

"I'm a little concerned she might not be at her best," Shelton said of the Pitman, N.J., native. "But she's really tough, injured or not. Knowing Tracey, she's going to block any pain she has. I anticipate she'll play well."

Yurgin said in an earlier interview that the second-ranked Tar Heels are just now starting to peak. Shelton agrees with Yurgin's assessment.

"We're playing very well," Shelton said. "I know and the girls know that we're capable of playing much better than we have. If we can peak this weekend, that would be great."

Seniors wrap up home careers

By DAVE GLENN
Assistant Sports Editor

UNC seniors play their final home game this weekend as the Tar Heels host the Virginia Cavaliers at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Linebacker Antonio Goss and wide receiver Randy Marriott join a veteran offensive line to lead the 1-8 UNC squad to battle the 5-4 Cavaliers in Kenan Stadium.

All eyes, especially those of Virginia defenders, will be on sophomore tailback Kennard Martin as he attempts to add to his 757-yard rushing total. Martin needs to average 122 yards in the final two games to join UNC's long list of 1,000-yard rushers.

The 5-foot-10, 201-pounder from Winston-Salem, also has eight rushing touchdowns on the year — tops in the ACC.

UNC coach Mack Brown knows that Martin has his work out for him. "Kennard needs to run very well the next two weeks to reach the 1,000-yard mark," Brown said. "But he's been so outstanding in recent games that we almost expect great performances from him every week."

Martin has a chance to become part of NCAA history in the next two weeks.

The UNC football program has produced more 1,000-yard rushers than any school in the country. Martin seeks to become the 19th Tar Heel to reach the coveted mark.

The much-maligned UNC defense is led by sophomore linebacker Bernard Timmons and freshman defensive back Terence Fedd, who had his best game of the year last week against Clemson.

"Terrence's performance last week is an exciting sign for our future," Brown said. "He was in on 18 hits, which is amazing for a free safety, especially a freshman."

Timmons, Fedd and friends will be matched against a Virginia offense that has averaged more than 22 points per game in 1988.

That offense is led by inconsistent quarterback Shawn Moore, who is second in the ACC with 229 yards per game in total offense. His main target will be wideout John Ford, a preseason All-American candidate, who has not produced the numbers expected of him in his senior year.

"Virginia's one of the better football teams in our league right now," Brown said, "and they are playing as good as anyone in the league."

The last time the Cavaliers came to Chapel Hill, tailback Derrick Fenner (remember him?) ran through the mud for an ACC-record 328 yards en route to a 27-7 UNC win. The Tar Heels were 6-3-1 at that point, on their way to an Aloha Bowl berth.

My, how the times have changed.
