Denkins shines in Tar Heel loss

From staff reports
UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — The North Carolina gymnastics team had a tough time over the weekend, falling to both teams it faced in a tri-meet Friday night.

The Tar Heels lost to two Pennsylvania teams — Penn State and Indiana University of Pennsylvania — in a meet held in the cold climate of central Pennsylvania.

The Nittany Lions won the meet with an overall score of 180.70, while the IUP Indians finished an extremely close second at 179.95. The Tar Heels managed 175.70 to bring up the rear.

While the UNC gymnasts made respectable showings in three of the five competitive events, they failed to place in the top three in the other two events: the bars and the beam.

UNC freshman Angie Denkins was the lone bright spot, as she was the only Tar Heel to finish in the top three in any event. She turned in another strong performance, winning the vault with a 9.65 score, and also winning the floor exercise with a 9.45 effort. The freshman also led the Tar Heels with a 36.75 all-around score, which was good for third place in the meet.

But Denkins' showing was all the glory that UNC could muster.

Michelle Goodwin of IUP, who finished first on the balance beam with a 9.5 score and second in the floor exercise with a 9.35, led all scorers with a 37.20 showing in the all-around.

Women's fencing takes two of four

PHILADELPHIA — The UNC women's fencing squad went on the road this weekend to Philadelphia, where Temple University hosted a four-team tournament.

The Tar Heels came home with two wins and two losses, leaving them with an impressive 14-3 record on the season.

UNC tallied victories over New York University (9-3) and William Patterson (9-2) in the tournament, while falling to Farleigh Dickinson and host Temple by identical 9-2 scores.

Lisa Campi and Alicia Foster turned in quality individual performances for the Tar Heels, combining to go 7-1 in the two UNC victories.

Campi, who finished 9-7 on the weekend, went 4-0 in the Tar Heel victories. Foster, who compiled a 7-9 record, went 3-1 against NYU and William Patterson.

Propositions

this is the only economic chance they have.

A second negative is that Proposal 42 is sure to increase cheating. Coaches have to win and to do that, they have to get the best athletes. Unfortunately, it is these great athletes who are most often affected by Proposal 42.

If a coach is recruiting a star from New York and the athlete is a victim of these rules, he can't offer a scholarship and he knows the family can't pay tuition. It is naive to think he will turn his back at this point. Instead, more students will avoid Proposal 42 by grade-changing or will have their "scholarship" provided by win-hungry alumni.

However, I don't agree totally with those opposing Proposal 42. My main complaint comes with their methods. Too often, I have heard these people are being just as narrow-minded in their ignoring of the others affected by these rulings.

I have a similar complaint with calling the SAT a racially biased test. I support it as an admission standard because it is the best yardstick for across-the-board comparison we have come up with. Universities must have some standards and 700 is certainly not an unreasonably high score. We need to remember that a school's teams should be representative of its student body. I would hate to return to the 1970s with no criteria, where athletes knew they could ignore school as long as they could play ball.

The test does not rely on information that is born with one race and not another, or is inherent to just one culture. The information is there for everyone, but some have better access to it. In this sense, the rulings put low-income families of all races and cultures at a disadvantage.

This leads me to my major objection to these rulings. Certainly they show a move in the right direction. However, the NCAA telling an inner-city athlete that he has to score 700 is not going to make him do it. For most of these athletes, it is not so simple as to just work harder; their disadvantages are too great. I'm positive that many of those currently affected by Prop 48 worked reasonably hard in high school, only to be walled off from higher education by incredibly poor school systems.

Being from Chicago, I can attest to this. Those in the Chicago public school system suffer from a tremendous disadvantage. The system is rife with political corruption and gladd-handing, which leads to mismanagement. The teachers go on strike nearly every year, due to poor safety conditions and low pay. Because of these same variables, the majority of quality teachers flock to the suburbs, leaving the inner-city with the bottom of the barrel.

It is unfair to expect that requiring an athlete to achieve a certain score on an aptitude test will enable him to accomplish this by himself. The NCAA should put as much emphasis on school reform as it does on athlete reform. This problem will not be solved until low-income families can give their child the same education as Donald Trump's kids. And we all know how far we are from that.

So where does that leave us in the meantime? I would eliminate Proposal 42 and adjust Proposition 48. The first point of my solution would be to keep the current requirements of Prop 48, including partial qualifiers. I would bar the affected freshmen from competition, but not from practicing, which they currently can't do under Prop 48.

Now, victims of Prop 48 have only two choices. One, they can go to junior college, then transfer and play two years of major college ball. On the other hand, they can go to college and sit out a year. Then, players like Illinois' Marcus Liberty, the best high school player in the nation his senior year, are often only minimally effective during their sophomore seasons because they have to shake off the rust. This leaves these players also with only two real years of major college play.

Besides allowing them to practice, which would eliminate this problem, I would extend their eligibility to four years. This would mean having some athletes on scholarship for five years, but this would give them an increased chance to graduate. With decreased class loads, most athletes — and many other students — can't graduate in four years. By forcing them out of school, the NCAA is actually encouraging them not to graduate.

However, to protect against players free-loading that extra year, the school would be forced to monitor his or her academic progress. If, after five years, the athlete failed to graduate, a scholarship would be taken away from the school. Chaney is a heavy supporter of this part of the plan.

Although still not perfect, this plan covers both sides of the issue. While not forcing colleges to turn away athletes from low-income families, it provides enough standards to prevent exploitation.

However, this problem will not be solved until society improves the primary education systems in poor neighborhoods. Unfortunately, at their convention, NCAA administrators demonstrated the nation's insensitivity to this entire issue. They debated only 20 minutes on Proposal 42 and then were surprised by the controversial reaction it brought. Hopefully, this attitude will change by 1990.
