

Congress to address issue of homeless

By JEFF ECKARD
Staff Writer

Student Congress will vote Wednesday on a resolution supporting student efforts to provide money for America's homeless by reducing U.S. and Soviet nuclear arms.

The Student Affairs Committee voted Thursday to send the resolution to congress.

An arms reduction measure would provide the federal government with a substantial amount of money that could be allocated to ease the plight of the United States' 3 million homeless people, said Brock Dickinson (Dist. 13), who introduced the resolution.

If the resolution passes, it will be sent to the Soviet Embassy and the U.S. State Department, Dickinson said. The resolution is not a formal proposal of how to attain an arms reduction, but an outline of ideas to convince the Soviets that the students are serious about the problem, he said.

The initiative began last semester after Dickinson and Joel Segal, then a UNC law student, expressed a common concern to seek arms reduction. Dickinson said he proposed to the Soviet Embassy that UNC student leaders attend a peace forum with their counterparts from Eastern Bloc nations.

The Soviet ambassador was supportive of the proposal, Dickinson said, but because of the large number of similar requests the embassy receives, he did not take the matter seriously.

"This resolution is an avenue of legitimacy to make the Soviets realize we are serious," he said.

The resolution calls for a 50 percent bilateral reduction of intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs); a moratorium on research, testing and deployment of all space-based weapon systems like the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI); reductions in conventional forces to put the two nations on equal footing; and greater recognition of human rights in the Soviet Union.

The 50 percent reduction in ICBMs is a realistic proposal because President Bush has voiced similar interest in such a plan, Dickinson said. He added that because of the cost of research and development of SDI and the Soviet version, both nations could possibly consider such a measure.

"Mr. Bush and Mr. Gorbachev are looking for input, and it is time we as students gave it to them," Dickinson said.

The issue of homelessness ties in with arms reduction because "it is the most pressing issue in our country today," Dickinson said. "If you have 3 million people on the streets living hand-to-mouth, then obviously that needs to be addressed." The Soviets could use the money for agricultural reforms, he said.

Dickinson added that Segal's work with the Student Action Union, a national student activist group, helped them tie the two issues together.

Segal has contacted about 50 other American universities and is encouraging their student groups to adopt similar proposals, Dickinson said.

Students will set up a table in the Pit today and at Saturday's Student Action Conference to get signatures for petitions which they will send to the Soviet Embassy.

Dickinson said he hoped students would be able to visit the Soviet Union in early May, but it would depend on how quickly the Soviets respond.

Academic Accolades

The School of Nursing has awarded the Ann Pierce Trowbridge Scholarship to senior William Boyette of Durham. The scholarship was established in 1982 by alumnus Ann Trowbridge Home in honor of her late mother, who had a lifelong unfulfilled desire to be a nurse and urged her daughter to become one.

Eric Littlejohn of Ada, Okla., has been selected as the second recipient of the Dean E. Smith Scholarship in the School of Education.

The scholarship is providing $4,000 toward Littlejohn's 1988-1989 educational expenses.

The scholarship was created by the Dean E. Smith Foundation, Inc. The non-profit foundation raises funds for a permanent endowment, and the income is used to strengthen elementary and secondary school teaching by awarding the scholarship to academically strong students who plan careers in public school teaching.

Stanley Mandel, professor of surgery, has been named associate dean for clinical affairs in the School of Medicine.

The appointment was announced by Dr. Stuart Bondurant, dean of the School of Medicine. "Dr. Mandel, who will also serve as chief of staff of North Carolina Memorial Hospital, is a distinguished medical educator and clinician. He is respected by faculty, students and patients as a clinician, a scientist and a teacher and for his devotion to patient care."

Yearbook staff to begin distribution of 1988 Yackety Yack

By JENNIFER WING
Staff Writer

The 1988 Yackety Yack, UNC's yearbook, is here and ready for distribution after a four-month delay, said Susana Dancy, Yackety Yack co-editor.

Students can pick up their yearbooks Friday afternoon in the Yackety Yack office, or can wait until next week to pick them up in the Pit or at a table near the Union Desk.

Graduates who ordered a yearbook will receive it through the mail.

The yearbook should have been delivered in the early fall, Dancy said, but last year's staff experienced some organizational problems that delayed publication of the book.

"The photo editor resigned before it was finished," Dancy said. "Evidently, he and last year's editor couldn't get along."

As a result, the yearbook staff was left without many of the pictures needed for the yearbook. "Some of the pictures that were supposed to exist didn't," she said. "We don't know if the pictures were lost or taken."

Also, last year's editor graduated in May without completing the yearbook. Dancy and Kelley King, co-editors, were not asked until November to complete the yearbook.

"We had a lot of pressure on us from the publishing company to complete the 1988 book by Jan. 1, or the company wouldn't have printed it until the summer," she said.

Dan Cowhig, chairman of the UNC Media Board, said the board helped save the 1988 yearbook by finding a photographer who donated pictures.

Dancy said she felt the quality of the yearbook had suffered because of the delayed delivery, although she said it was not a bad yearbook. "Things are never as good when you are rushed."

"We're glad the books are coming because it's hurt the sales this year," she said. The staff sold 2,000 1988 books, but only 700 1989 books have been sold, which is unusually low for this time of year, Dancy said.

Cowhig said, "I think that anytime the Yack comes out late, the student wonders if he should buy the book for next year."

The 1988 yearbook is called "Shades of Blue" and is more contemporary than past yearbooks, Dancy said. But the book still is primarily pictures, she said.

"It has a few features that are written by people involved in the things they are writing about," she said. "We are trying to show the diversity of the student body."

The Yackety Yack has $120,000 in its total budget; $70,000 is used for publishing and the remaining money is used for operating costs, such as photography.

Student Congress allotted the 1988 yearbook $18,000, but the Yackety Yack received $9,000 for 1989. "I don't know why," Dancy said. "They (Student Congress) evidently had their reasons," she said.

Because of the funding decrease, the cost of a 1989 yearbook will increase from $22 to $25, she said. Delivery costs an additional $3.

Activist Conrad Tillard will speak Friday at 7 p.m. in Hamilton 100 as part of the Black Student Movement's commemoration of Black History Month.

Tillard was president of the Black Student League at the University of Pennsylvania and organized the first annual Black Student Unity Conference in 1986.

Tillard also founded and served as executive director of the National Black Student Unity Congress.

"We thought it was important to bring in someone who's young," said Warren Robinson, BSM special projects chairman.

Tillard's lecture topics include "Black Community in the 21st Century," "Role of the 'Talented Tenth': To Be Young, Gifted and Black" and "Black History and Politics."

BSM leaders said Tillard fits in with their focus on the future.

"Instead of concentrating on the past, we wanted to do something more in the present and future," Robinson said. "We wanted to concentrate on discovery."

The Cable News Network named Tillard a "Face of '87," and Philadelphia Magazine designated him a "Person to Watch." He has appeared on the "Today Show," the Cable News Network and the "CBS Evening News."

Tillard also received the Jesse Jackson Award for Leadership at the University of Pennsylvania. Tillard, a Muslim, "has been labelled impressive and controversial because he takes control... He believes all things can be accomplished through faith," according to a flier circulated by the BSM.

"TO THE SHOCK of liberals everywhere, George Bush's idea of a kinder, gentler nation seems to be one where we don't kill babies."
