Seniors go out in style as UNC routs Mt. St. Mary's

By DOUG HOGGERVORST
Staff Writer

"It might be. It could be. It is!" Harry (Carey) normally refers to a Chicago Cubs home run with these immortal words but he would have uttered them following the North Carolina women's basketball game Monday night.

And Carey's famous phrase would have called deserved attention to UNC's rout over Mount St. Mary's of Md., 116-92. The win halted the Tar Heels' 14-game losing streak before they enter the ACC tournament Saturday in Fayetteville.

For the year, UNC owns a 10-19 record, while Mt. St. Mary's fell to 17-8.

On senior night, North Carolina center Merlaine Oden came through with the best game of her career, posting game and career highs of 31 points and 16 rebounds on an incredible 14-of-16 shooting. UNC senior Jenny Yopp also played tremendously, dishing out a career-best and game-high 6 assists without turning the ball over.

Oden was all smiles coming out of the locker room after the game.

"It feels good to win," she said. "I'm real excited about it because it's a definite confidence builder going into the ACC. I knew this was my last game here and I wanted to go out with a win."

The Tar Heels controlled most of the first half and entered the locker room up by nine, 51-42. However, the game was not out of reach, especially with the three-point touch of the Mountaineers, who hit 13 treys in the game.

UNC delivered a stunning blow to Mt. St. Mary's before the second half began.

Mountaineer's coach Bill Sheahan earned a technical foul as the teams exited to their locker rooms following the first half, and North Carolina was awarded a pair of free throws and the ball to start the second half.

Freshman LeAnn Kennedy, who added a career-high 23 points, hit both foul shots and Liza Donnell nailed a 15-foot jumper to give UNC a 13-point lead, 55-42, before Mt. St. Mary's touched the ball.

The teams remained content to trade baskets and remain in a 13 to 15 point Tar Heel lead until 13 minutes remained. From there, North Carolina went on a 10-2 run to gain a 19-point edge, 82-61.

Oden hit a jumpshot from the elbow with the shot clock expiring to start the spurt. Kennedy added a pair of foul shots and Sheri Anderson sank an open eight-footer before the Mountaineer's Tracy Bradson hit a pretty 16-foot pull-up jumper.

Oden responded with a bucket off an offensive rebound and Tanya

Lamb finished the run, hitting a tough sliding shot from eight feet.

Mt. St. Mary's couldn't recover from the wide 19-point UNC advantage despite their three-point touch because of excellent Tar Heel marksmanship.

UNC shot 59 percent from the floor (48 of 81) and 82 percent from the foul line (18 of 22), two places that they have struggled this season.

"We took the same shots tonight as we did against Wake Forest and Duke when they fell tonight," Hatchell said. "I think if we look to the future it's real important. We're the underdog going in against Maryland (UNC's first round opponent) but they know how they can play."

Hatchell credited the high point total to the team's staunch defense in the man-to-man full-court pressure.

"We played up and down the floor and played a lot of players," Hatchell said. "The harder we play on defense, the better we are offensively. I felt if you get your defense going you get offense going and I felt that we weren't tight enough early on."

Of North Carolina's first 20 points, Oden netted 10 of them, all inside on rebounds or good post moves.

"It seems when I have fun I play better, and I had fun," Oden said.

Hopefully for the Tar Heels, Oden will be having fun next Saturday against Maryland.

Netters ease by Nittany Lions

By DAVID J. KUPSTAS
Staff Writer

One thing that has always bothered Penn State tennis coach Holmes Cathrall is that his team usually plays well against UNC but always comes up a little short.

This was not a problem for Cathrall Monday, however.

His Nittany Lions opened up with a doubles win, but the Tar Heels surrendered only one set after that as they rolled to an 8-1 win. The Heels improved their record to 4-2, while Penn State fell to 1-2.

"I think in spots we played a little better today," said UNC coach Allen Morris, who wasn't satisfied with the Tar Heels' 8-1 win over Elon on Sunday. "I was a little disappointed with our No. 3 doubles team, but they're a team we're experimenting with. They played well yesterday."

The third-seeded doubles team of freshmen Joe Frierson and Chris Mumford hung tough in the first set, eventually losing in a tiebreaker. Penn State's Jamie Savitch and Brad Fielding took control in the next set, though, and won 7-6, 6-3.

The match was held indoors at the Chapel Hill Tennis Center because of the rain. The athletic department didn't even know if courts were available until Monday morning.

The tennis team played second fiddle to club members with reservations and had only two courts for the match's first hour.

Play began with doubles matches, of which UNC took two out of three. The Tar Heels' top-seeded team of David Pollack and Don Johnson handled Dave Welch and David Schoenly, 6-0, 7-6, while UNC's Jimmy Weilbaecher and Andre Janasik handed Tim Hughes and Scott Pickering their first loss, 6-3, 6-2.

Basketball player of the year finalists named

From Staff and Wire reports

Oklahoma teammates Stacey King and Mookie Blaylock and LSU freshman guard Chris Jackson were among the 10 finalists announced Monday for The AP college basketball player of the year award.

Stanford's Todd Lichti, Indiana's Jay Edwards and Syracuse's Sherman Douglas join Blaylock and Jackson as the guards eligible for the honor, which will be announced in University Park, Pa., for this match. Freshman Barry Wadsworth, the number-one seed, left the team for personal reasons, and second-seeded Mark Cavalier is out of action because of a broken finger. In addition, two of Cathrall's other players are ineligible.

Netters ease by Nittany Lions

Next year will be Penn State's year, or so says Cathrall. His strong recruiting class is expected to bump most of the current top six out.

"We've always beaten Penn State, but they're always very scrappy," Morris said. "Even though the score was 8-1, there were some pretty good sets."

The Tar Heels have never lost to the Nittany Lions in their 17 meetings.

UNC gets another shot at proving themselves at home for Morris next Tuesday against William and Mary. Then its off to California over spring break for six contests.

"We'll know a lot more about our team when we get back from California," Morris said, adding that the ladder should be fairly well solidified after the trip.
