

Undergraduate Student Court accepting applications

By BRENDA CAMPBELL
Staff Writer

Students interested in working on the Undergraduate Student Court and attorney general's staff can turn in applications beginning Friday for the 1989-90 year.

"The basic premise of the honor court and the attorney general staff is to uphold the honor system, which are the roots of the University system," said John Gilbert, former honor court vice chairman.

An honor court member has two main responsibilities: to hear violations of the Honor Code and determine a verdict and to educate the student body on the Honor Code, Gilbert said.

The honor court hears charges brought against students and decides from the evidence presented whether the defendant is guilty or not, he said.

Officers look for specific characteristics when reading applications and interviewing candidates, said Ruth Dowling, newly appointed honor court chairwoman.

"We look for someone who is interested in judicial work, who is open-minded, who has clear convictions and who can express themselves well," Dowling said. "It is also a good idea for the applicant to have knowledge about the honor system."

"If they need to, they can pick up a Honor Code instrument, which explains the system, when they come to get an application."

Applicants should be prepared to be committed to their responsibilities,

Dowling said. "This position has to be taken seriously," she said. "It's not just to be used on a resume. There is no way we can excuse missing a hearing."

Another honor court responsibility is student education, Dowling said. "A court member also has to be willing to take an active role in the education aspect," she said. "We try to keep the whole student body educated on the Honor Code."

About 20 to 25 positions are open on the court, 10 of which are alternate positions, Dowling said.

"We usually have about 130 applications turned in," she said. "About half of the applicants are interviewed, and from the people interviewed the positions are filled."

The undergraduate attorney general's staff works on the other half of the judicial system, Gilbert said.

The attorney general's staff prepares evidence against or in defense of the student, he said. One member of the staff is appointed as the defense counsel, and one is appointed as the investigator.

The attorney general's staff has about 28 staff positions open and 5 assistant attorney general positions open, said Philip Floyd, assistant attorney general. But that number fluctuates depending on the number of present staff members who reapply, Floyd said.

Applications will be available for interested students at the Student Union desk and in suites C and D of the Union beginning Friday.

World-famous string quartet to bring act to Memorial Hall

"If the Tokyo String Quartet isn't the world's greatest chamber music ensemble, it's hard to imagine which group is." — The Washington Times.

"Simply put, quartet-playing doesn't get much better than this."

— The (Louisville) Courier-Journal.

The Tokyo String Quartet, internationally acclaimed and now in its 18th season, will perform Friday, March 5, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall as the last performance in the Carolina Union Performing Arts Series.

The ensemble performs regularly in New York's major halls, including Carnegie Hall in which it plays its "Great Quartets" series. It also appears regularly at Yale University, where the members are artists-in-residence. In addition to its American performances, the quartet will make three European tours this year, performing in London, Paris, Munich, Vienna, Stockholm and Oslo.

Awards received by the group include Best Chamber Music Recording of the Year from both Stereo Review and Gramophone. The quartet has also received three Grammy nominations. WETA-FM of Washington, D.C., says of their recordings, "There simply isn't any more beautiful music in the world."

Also included in their list of accomplishments are a feature on the CBS program "Sunday Morning" and a taped concert from the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, which aired on public television across the country.

The quartet members are: violinist Peter Oundjian, a native of Toronto who began his classical studies at the age of 7; Kikuei Ikeda, violinist and award-winning soloist, who was born in Tokyo and studied violin at the Toho Academy of Music; Kazuhide Isomura, violinist, who is a graduate of Toho Academy and a founder of the Tokyo String Quartet; and Sadao Harada, cellist, who began his studies under his father when he was 11 and is also a founding member of the group.

The quartet, formed in 1969 at the Juilliard School of Music, actually began some years earlier. Several of the founding members were students together at the Toho School of Music in Tokyo. There they were profoundly influenced by professor Hideo Saito, who instilled in them a deep commitment to chamber music.

The members later came to the United States for further study under Robert Mann, Raphael Hillyer and Claus Adam. Soon after the group's formation in 1969, it won first prize at the Coleman Auditions in Pasadena, Texas; the Munich Competition; and the Young Concert Artists International Auditions, which brought it worldwide attention.

So come out and hear the sound that Newsweek reviewer Alan Rich called "fine Japanese silk made audible."

The Tokyo String Quartet will perform Friday, March 5, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Tickets are $12 for the public, and are available at the Carolina Union Box Office. UNC students may buy one ticket and get one free. For more information, call 962-1449.

also makes it difficult to determine off-campus distribution, he said.

But Riemann said unequal distribution probably wouldn't affect the workings of the congress. "Functionally it doesn't make a whole lot of difference on most issues," he said. "It's not a huge problem."

But congress member Gene Davis (Dist. 18) said the issue should be looked into. "If it's unconstitutional then it's unconstitutional, and something must be done about it," he said.

Riemann said there weren't any issues where congress members split votes on residential or graduate and undergraduate lines. "There's not a lot of block voting," he said. "Congress works pretty much by consensus."

Riemann said the unequal distribution would be a problem if interests of a certain group weren't heard or if there were "violent conflicts" between the different groups represented. But it will not be a problem as long as every student has the means to get his views heard, he said.

Davis said the unequal distribution was important, especially to the allocation of student fees. Off-campus students may have different needs and opinions about how their fees should be spent than on-campus students do, he said.

"You have to look at what Student Congress does," he said. "The main purpose is allocation money for student groups. It's important that it's done by proportion."

There would be advantages and disadvantages to redistricting congress, Riemann said. "There might be a danger in having 12 off-campus seats when we can't fill eight," he said.

But decreasing the number of graduate representatives might make things easier for congress because graduate seats are often difficult to fill, Riemann said.

Davis said it wouldn't be fair to assume that off-campus students wouldn't fill the seats allotted to them. "If they want to have any say as to how their money is distributed then they should let us know."

Davis said congress should petition the Elections Board to redistrict congress based on the present unconstitutional districting.

Riemann said congress should address the issue for its next scheduled redistricting but added that the unequal districting wasn't a pressing issue.
