Flyers, Penguins set to face off

While the Calgary Flames get ready for their annual battle with Wayne Gretzky, a new hockey rivalry opens the second round of the Stanley Cup playoffs Monday — the battle of Pennsylvania.

While the Flames and Gretzky's Los Angeles Kings were winning seventh games Saturday night against Vancouver and Edmonton Saturday night, one of the more intriguing series of the playoffs was set to begin: the playoff-hardened Philadelphia Flyers and the novice Pittsburgh Penguins.

"This team has been down for so long, we don't know what's up," said Pittsburgh coach Gene Ubriaco. whose team eliminated the New York Rangers in four straight games in its first playoff appearance since 1982.

Monday night's play will also feature the opener of the Adams Division final with Boston at

Boxing connected to Alzheimer's

CHICAGO — Research suggests that boxing injuries may lead to Alzheimer's disease, the degenerative brain ailment that afflicted former boxer Sugar Ray Robinson, a university neurologist said.

Patricio Reyes, an associate professor of neurology at Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, said he studied eight former amateur and professional boxers age 65 through 89 and all satisfied the clinical criteria for Alzheimer's

Three were diagnosed as having Parkinson's disease, another brain disease that causes tremors, impedes movement and may cause personality changes and mild memory loss.

However, he noted: "I don't think we should say that chronic brain injury causes Alzheimer's. There is a need to do further scientific studies."
