IN DEPTH

Hildebolt prepares to make transition

By MELANIE L. BLACK
Staff Writer

Pushed for time and pressed to begin reforms within student government, Bill Hildebolt will try to prepare for the transition from the outgoing administration when he is inaugurated Tuesday.

"It's definitely not enough time," Hildebolt said. "It's going to be a bumpy ride."

These time restraints, coupled with other issues, will make the student government transition more difficult. "Not only is this the shortest time ever, but there are also people upset with the way the election went, and people pushing for reform in student government right now."

Hildebolt said he would make the most of the time he had. Applications for the positions of student body vice president, treasurer and secretary were made available Friday. Applications for other appointed positions will be available today. Evaluation forms for the "Indispensable Guide to Classes" should be ready Tuesday, he said.

Student Body President Brien Lewis said the limited time available for the transition was his biggest concern, but that he felt the transition would be smooth.

"It will be as smooth as it can be under the time restraints," he said. Lewis' administration is prepared for the change, he said, and Lewis will be available to help Hildebolt. "We have been anticipating transition for quite some time."

Joe Andronaco, student body vice president, said he didn't view the time factor as a potential problem. "I don't think it really handicaps the process that much," he said. "He [Hildebolt] has been involved in transitions before. He has the experience to see what needs to be done."

Ruffin Hall, student government director of academic affairs, said, "Transition in student government is never smooth." Time constraints will place added pressure on Hildebolt, he said. "It puts a lot more pressure on Bill to get official inaugural positions set."

The pressure to make other appointments that Student Congress must confirm is not as great, Hall said. "There are some things that just can't be rushed."

Congress representative Sam Bagenstos (Dist. 14) said he believed the transition could be smooth. "The question is, will the people in Suite C let this be a smooth transition?" he said. "I think they will."

Lewis has already taken steps to brief Hildebolt about the responsibilities of SBP, Bagenstos said.

Restoring student confidence in student government is one of the first concerns Hildebolt plans to address, he said. "If we can get transition going smoothly, we can go in that direction," he said. He said he hoped to build a "coalition government" with the other SBP candidates and the 1,100 students who signed the petition urging reforms within student government.

"I hope their message is 'We want to see student government be active and we want to play a role in student government,'" Hildebolt said. "I hope there are going to be 1,100 people who are going to come to office hours, come see me in the Pit, stop me on campus and make sure I do my job."

Lewis said a few loose ends may need to be tied before the outgoing administration steps down. He cited a report on Advisory Committees as an example. Lewis has plans to revamp the report and make it a joint student and faculty report before he leaves office.

The tuition issue is one that will continue into the next administration, Lewis said. "The whole way to achieve the goals of the Tuition Defense Initiative will require legislation, and they don't start sitting until the summer."

Hildebolt said he planned to continue working on issues left over from the previous administration. "The really big ones are tuition, financial aid and faculty pay for both professors and grad students."

Bagenstos also cited the tuition increase as a continuing issue. "Brien's responses to the tuition issue have been in the form of proposals which his successor will have to push," he said.

Hall predicted that the issues of financial aid and faculty salaries would spill over into the next administration, as would the food services contract and minority issues. "The biggest issue is re-establishing confidence in student government, and communication will be the key," Hall said.

"One year is not long enough to address concerns students have," said Andronaco, who also said he expected the new administration to continue to address recent issues. "It is very important to address difficult questions," he said.

Lewis said, "There are a whole bunch of issues that you never wrap up." He predicted the new administration would have to deal with the issues of parking, transit services improvements, minority issues, faculty recruitment, campus development, campus safety and state-wide issues.

He advised Hildebolt to "know your agenda, pass the ball on to implement your agenda and brace yourself."

Cell

a voicing of her concern," she said. She said she expected the committee to meet with the dean once a month.

The committee will include representatives from the following organizations:

- African/African-American Studies Curriculum
- Asian Students Association
- Association of International Students
- Black Student Movement
- Campus Y
- Carolina Gay and Lesbian Association
- Carolina Indian Circle
- SANGAM
- Student Government (Executive Branch)
- Women's Studies Advisory Council
- Two at-large seats for ad hoc issues
- One faculty member

Lumsden acknowledged the committee's emphasis on minority members, saying, "I think some of the more important issues in academics today affect minorities. For instance, there are few non-white faculty members. In order to make any changes, non-whites have to be there."

Student committee members, who will be chosen as delegates by their respective campus organizations, should serve for a year, Ards said. The committee's faculty member will provide a link between consecutive annual committees. "He or she will keep a sense of continuity," she said.

Cell said she was looking forward to working with the committee. "The agenda will be largely a matter of student initiative."

She said she planned to use the committee's suggestions, but couldn't guarantee that she would always act in accordance with their wishes. "You may listen to people seriously and still come to a different conclusion."

Although the committee is made up predominantly of minority students, the group will work on issues concerning all students, the organizers said. The prominence of minorities on the committee should not be a problem, Cell said, but added that she would not be opposed to changing the group's makeup if it were necessary in order to maintain balance.
