Senate warns Gorbachev against Lithuanian action

WASHINGTON — Senate leaders in both parties warned Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev on Sunday that carrying out his threatened economic blockade against Lithuania could derail opening trade relations between the United States and Moscow.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, and Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said retaliation by Moscow to Lithuania's March 11 declaration of independence would jeopardize a trade agreement President Bush and Gorbachev hope to sign at a summit in June.

The Bush administration, meanwhile, was taking what Secretary of State James Baker described as a "wait and see" attitude as the Kremlin-imposed deadline for Lithuania to rescind its declaration of independence passed Sunday night.

Mitchell, who on Saturday condemned Gorbachev's ultimatum as "precisely the wrong approach," said Sunday he was waiting for Bush to do the same. But, in an interview on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," he also supported the administration's reluctance to issue specific counter threats.

Kashmir region site of Hindu, Moslem clash

SRINAGAR, India — Indian security forces clashed repeatedly Sunday with Moslem militants in the capital of the northern Kashmir region and made dozens of arrests.

The clashes come at a time of escalating tension over Kashmir between predominantly Hindu India and Pakistan, a Moslem nation. The two countries have accused each other of trying to provoke a war.

The leader of a powerful, fundamentalist Hindu party warned Sunday that Moslem Pakistan would "cease to exist" if it began a war with India.

L.K. Advani, head of the Bharatiya Janata Party, a key member of the governing left-right coalition, told a crowd in Bombay that Pakistani interference in Kashmir should be recognized as "undeclared war by Pakistan," the United News of India news agency reported.

Military expansion units planned for Fort Bragg

FORT BRAGG — While Pentagon planners look for ways to trim their budget, Fort Bragg officials are planning expansions — projects that include a new Green Beret unit that will specialize in Africa.

The 3rd Special Forces Group, deactivated near the end of the Vietnam war, is being reformed at the sprawling U.S. Army base outside of Fayetteville.

Part of the Special Forces mission is to prevent insurgencies in developing countries or to stop revolutions in progress by helping to strengthen national institutions, said Maj. Bill Chadwick, the Special Forces officer in charge of starting the new unit.

"I really believe we are the Peace Corps with M-16s," he told The News and Observer of Raleigh in an interview published Sunday.

The unit's scheduled reactivation on June 29 is part of the renewed emphasis on U.S. special operations forces that began in 1980.

Vice president choice under fire

By MYRON B. PITTS
Assistant University Editor

Grant Vinik, a junior from Mountain Brook, Ala., may become the second student body vice president (SBVP) in school history, but former Student Congress representative and search committee member Jeffrey Beall questioned the reasons behind his selection Sunday night.

Student Body President Bill Hildebolt chose Vinik from a field of three candidates proposed by the search committee. Confirmation of Vinik's appointment awaits approval from the Student Congress Rules and Judiciary Committee and the full congress. The Rules and Judiciary Committee met Sunday night to vote on the president's appointments but failed to reach quorum. The committee will meet again today at 6 p.m.

The search committee is chaired by the Student Supreme Court Chief Justice and comprises the former student body president, two outgoing congress representatives and a student body president appointee.

Beall said Hildebolt's choice went against the wishes of the committee, who ranked two other candidates above Vinik. Sophomores Mark Bibbs and Meridith Rentz were the committee's first and second choices, respectively.

Hildebolt's choice discriminated against sophomores and, by choosing a white male, he ignored his promise to diversify student government, Beall said. "He promised to open up student government, but he skipped over a black and he skipped over a woman. I think that needs close scrutiny."

Hildebolt said he decided not to choose a sophomore vice president because the person might be perceived as receiving his support for a presidential campaign for next year. Bibbs and Rentz have both been involved in campaigns this year. Bibbs ran for student body president this year and Rentz was campaign manager for candidate John Lomax.

"I swore both before the election and after the election that I wouldn't appoint a sophomore," Hildebolt said. "They would have to be exceptionally more qualified."

Beall betrayed the trust of the search committee in his release of the three vice president choices because the business of the committee was supposed to be kept confidential, Hildebolt said. "He violated the trust of myself and members of the search committee by making that information public."

Vinik agreed, saying, "I thought we'd risen above the petty politics of the last year — the back-stabbing (and) political power plays — but apparently not. Jeff is up to his old antics."

Events to raise concern

Earth Week

By STEPHEN POOLE
Staff Writer

Local students, environmentalists and merchants will celebrate Earth Week April 15-28 with dances, films, parades, picnics and meetings in the Chapel Hill/Carrboro area.

Earth Week was created to celebrate the planet and draw attention to problems confronting the environment. The festivities will include Earth Day, which will be April 22, the 20th anniversary of the original celebration.

Earth Week will feature a three-day film festival starting April 16. Each day will spotlight a speaker and at least two films, ranging from 12 minutes to one hour, followed by an open discussion. Discussions will focus on a different theme each night. April 16 will examine solid waste and garbage; April 17, pesticides and alternative agriculture; and April 18 will focus on habitat destruction and rain forests.

The festival will be action-oriented, said Blair Pollock, one of the film festival's speakers. Organizers will inform film viewers of pressing environmental issues and give tips for action. "It's an opportunity for people to get a little more education — to learn and take action."

Pollock said he hoped the magnitude of the event would be reflected in the newspaper's coverage.

School's dinner to honor Kuralt

By JESSICA YATES
Staff Writer

A fund-raising dinner for UNC's School of Social Work April 20 plans to recognize CBS news commentator Charles Kuralt for his contributions to North Carolina.

Kuralt, a Wilmington native and graduate of UNC, said he knew who the real guests of honor were — his father and the many other social workers in the state who have devoted their lives to helping disadvantaged and poverty-stricken Tar Heels.

"I think social workers are under-appreciated," he said. "But social workers are the key to giving people the chance to help themselves."

Kuralt's father, Wallace Kuralt, served as director of the Mecklenburg County Department of Social Services for 27 years. Wallace Kuralt will attend the 7:30 p.m. dinner at the Sheraton Imperial Hotel in the Research Triangle Park.

Other scheduled guests include Andy Rooney, CBS-TV's "60 Minutes" commentator, and Gov. Jim Martin. Proceeds from the $100 dinner tickets will go toward the Wallace Kuralt Professorship at the School of Social Work.

Charles Kuralt said he was not worthy of such a tribute. "I haven't made a strong contribution to the state," he said. "I've maintained a strong interest in the state."

"My travels have really taken me to every part of every state, but somehow, I always think of North Carolina as home."

His North Carolina background surfaces in his "Sunday Morning" show on CBS and in his well-known "On the Road" series, started in 1967, which he hopes to return to later in the year.

Kuralt often is described as a people-behind-the-news commentator. Ever since his "People" column in the Charlotte News, which won the Ernie Pyle Memorial Award in 1957, Kuralt said, he has preferred focusing on "ordinary folks."

An intense desire to get to know the ordinary folks has resulted in an awareness and interest in the social problems of the state for both Charles Kuralt and his parents.

"I think of North Carolina as a progressive state, especially for the South," he said. "It's still a poor state. You might as well say one-third of the population is in really bad trouble." He noted that North Carolina has the highest infant mortality rate in the country. "We still have a long way to go in the state."

But the state's social troubles are not insurmountable, he emphasized. "I do think we can make a difference in attacking the root causes of poverty and illiteracy that really keep North Carolina down."

That's where a lot of his interest in the School of Social Work comes in, Kuralt said. "A lot of these problems can be alleviated by well-trained professionals with compassionate hearts."

The school has a lot of dedicated people, but it has always been underfunded due to a lack of wealthy alumni from the School of Social Work, he said.

Developer Goforth found dead

From staff reports

James Paul "J.P." Goforth, one of the biggest developers in Chapel Hill, was found dead in his garage by Chapel Hill police Saturday afternoon. The garage was filled with carbon monoxide from a running car in the garage.

Police are reluctant to call the death a suicide because they did not find a suicide note. Chatham-Orange County District Attorney Carl Fox said an autopsy would be done Sunday.

Goforth's body was discovered around 2 p.m. after Mike Fox, secretary of Goforth's Security Building Co., reported that he could not get an answer at Goforth's 13 Mt. Bolus Road home. He told police he heard an engine running in the garage.

A police spokesperson said there was no indication of foul play.

Fox said he would decide later this week how to continue an investigation of Goforth's business dealings by the State Bureau of Investigation. Fox announced during a press conference April 13 he would seek SBI help to investigate complaints from homeowners, employees and businessmen in the area concerning Goforth.

Goforth, 49, a native of Statesville, graduated from UNC in 1963 with a degree in industrial relations. In 1966, he graduated from the UNC School of Law, and around that time began his own company, Security Builders.

Goforth expanded into commercial building, and in the mid-1980s he contracted with UNC to build Carmichael Residence Hall and Sitterson Hall and to renovate Wilson Library.

Goforth lived alone.

Frye brings experience to CAA position

Editor's note: This week The Daily Tar Heel will run personality profiles of the newly elected presidents of the Carolina Athletic Association, Residence Hall Association and student body.

By CARRINGTON WELLS
Staff Writer

Lisa Frye, a junior from Conover who was elected to her second term as Carolina Athletic Association (CAA) President in February, has impressed both peers and UNC administrators with her leadership.

John Swofford, UNC athletic director, said Lisa had been exceptional as CAA president. "I've been athletic director for the past 10 years, and we have been fortunate with the leadership in the CAA overall, but Lisa is certainly outstanding in my mind in terms of the time and effort she has given to this job."

"Lisa has represented the CAA and the students well on the Athletic Council. Her representation of the students has been strong, but she also understands how the various constituencies (students, administrators and alumni) fit together."

"Her fair-mindedness, her pleasant personality and her quiet strength make Lisa an excellent leader, and I am looking forward to working with her for a second year," Swofford said.

Frye said her first year as president was a real learning experience. "I'm proudest of my work with the Student Recreation Center (SRC). Last summer, the SRC board, composed of representatives from different areas of campus, wrote the SRC by-laws, and I'm proud that we were able to come out with a document that students would be pleased with."

She wasn't as successful in some of her undertakings, but Lisa said she learned from her mistakes. "Being CAA president built my strength and confidence. When I make mistakes, they affect a lot of students, and that is hard. After the Duke ticket distribution, for example, I had to admit to several thousand people that I had messed up, but that I'd try again."

Lynn Frye, Lisa's father, said he was pleased with Lisa's re-election. "My wife and I are very happy for her. She worked very hard last year, and she definitely deserved to be elected again. She is strongly committed to whatever she does, especially with the CAA."

Junior Jimmy Burns said he had also noticed Lisa's unusual sense of commitment.

"There are many bright, talented, creative people at this University, but Lisa combines all of this with strong commitment, and actually accomplishes things. It is her commitment which enables her to work so effectively as a student leader."

Chancellor Paul Hardin said he had the honor of giving Lisa the Jane Craig Gray award, which honors the junior class woman who has made the most
