

Policemen strike in Nepal to protest deaths of 6 in mob violence

From Associated Press reports
KATMANDU, Nepal — Hundreds of policemen refused to go to work Tuesday after six of their colleagues were killed in daylong rioting. A Cabinet minister said the army would be used to control any new upsurges of violence.
On Monday, angry mobs beat six policemen to death, and another 15 policemen were reported missing, the state-owned Rashtriya Samachar Samiti news agency said.

The attackers accused police of condoning and sometimes joining a pro-monarchist group blamed for violence and arson attacks since a new government headed by pro-democracy forces took office last week.
Monday's violence was the worst since April 6, when police and troops killed scores of pro-democracy demonstrators at the height of Nepal's popular movement for a multiparty system.

At least five civilians were killed in retaliatory police firing after Monday's attacks, the news agency said.
Government officials said police officers in most of Katmandu's 33 precincts failed to report to work Tuesday. Almost none of the capital's estimated 4,000 policemen were seen on the streets of Katmandu, a city of 250,000 people.

"There are no policemen anywhere in the city," a taxi driver said after six hours on the streets. "Even traffic policemen are absent today." Shops opened and streets were clogged with traffic after a 10-hour curfew clamped on Monday night was lifted at 6 a.m. There were no reports of violence.

The curfew went back into effect at 7 p.m., restricting people to their homes. Home Minister Yog Prasad Upadhyay said Tuesday that in any upsurges in violence, "we will have to fall back on the army in a limited way." He said the "tremendous amount of confidence the people have in this government is compensating for the absence of police. This is apparent from the fact that ... the country is peaceful." Prime Minister Krishna Prasad Bhattarai met with King Birendra Tuesday, officials said.

Bhattarai and his government, a coalition of democrats, Communists, royalists and independents, took office Thursday after an eight-week campaign against the previous regime, which was subservient to the king.

Oct. 27. "The telephone system is already in place, and the software is already here," he said.
The present budget cuts have slowed the implementation of the system, but not stopped it, he said. "Getting information out to the students about the system has been slowed down because of problems with printing, but other than that, everything is in place."

Donations

the University, but to its related foundations," she said. Such foundations include the Educational Foundation, the Business Foundation, the Medical Foundation and others. About $9 million goes to buildings, Vickery said.
The state appropriated UNC about $230 million in 1988, Vickery said.
Donald Boulton, dean and vice chancellor of student affairs, said donations were becoming increasingly important as assistance from the state diminished. "For every dollar we spend on your education, you give us seven cents in

Baseball

Campbell has now played the role of spoiler for a pair of Tar Heel hitters. On May 25, 1988, UNC's Tom Nevin had his 22-game streak halted by the Camels.
Early in yesterday's contest, Campbell was spoiling the Tar Heels' tuneup for this weekend's three-game set with ACC co-leader N.C. State. With two down in the fourth inning and UNC starter Derek Manning seemingly struggling again early today, I'm happy that we were able to get in a good enough pitching situation that we were able to come out with a win."

After singles by Villani and Arendas in the fifth, Woodall stroked a single to send Villani home and start what appeared to be a Tar Heel rally. Caldwell took a visit to the mound and calmed down McGraw, who, after a sac bunt by Leshnock and an intentional walk to Kingston, struck out Kurt Green and got a Maurer ground out to end the inning.

Tuition

tuition, and the state gives us 37 cents," he said. "All the rest we have to get from somewhere else." The remainder comes from gifts, federal grants and contracts such as research, Boulton said.
"We need to do a lot of fund raising — more than we have ever done," he said. "Fund raising's probably the most important activity we have for the next 10 years."
Sixteen foundations at the University are working to raise money, Boulton said. "Rather than being criticized, they need to be applauded."

The state at one time gave 85 cents for every dollar spent at the University, but that rate has dropped to 37 cents, Boulton said. "Now there are more competing needs for the tax dollars," he said. "Because we're state-supported, people think their taxes pay all their bills."
The University needs all it can get from contributors, Boulton said. "We're in an uphill battle to convince people we need their donations," he said. "We need them desperately."
