Chris Gardocki booted a 43-yard punt to Eric Blount. The junior fielded the ball at the 29 and returned it 7 yards to the 36. It was UNC's best field position of the day, but a holding penalty brought the ball back 10 yards.

Throwing on first down, UNC quarterback Todd Burnett looked to split end Julius Reese to start a pivotal drive. Burnett dropped back at the left hashmark and threw across the field for Reese on the right sideline. But instead of moving toward the ball, Reese waited for its arrival.

He could still be there now. Clemson cornerback Dexter Davis didn't wait, cutting in front of the receiver for an interception and a 30-yard touchdown jaunt that gave the Tigers a 14-3 lead.

The snag was Davis' sixth interception of the season, and it gave his team a school-record six non-offensive TDs, including three on interception returns.

"It was more my fault than (Burnett's)," Brown said. "I shouldn't have called it. I shouldn't ask a kid to throw across the field against a great defensive player like that."

After Gardocki's second field goal of the game — a 31-yard chip shot with 2:48 left in the first half — another Tiger defensive effort saved them from the desperate clutches of a North Carolina team playing well above its head.

Throughout the first stanza, UNC's ground game had been ineffective. On the half, in fact, it had generated only 31 yards on 17 carries, whereas the Tigers had already rambled for 124 yards on only 24 attempts. Brown, logically, opted for the same attack he used in last week's 34-10 victory over Maryland: the pass, which Burnett used to gain 312 yards versus the Terps, the second-highest total in the conference this season.

In the half's waning minutes, six straight completions and a 7-yard run from Burnett moved UNC 54 yards, giving it a first-and-10 on the Clemson 24, close enough for a field goal at worst and a crucial TD at best.

After two incomplete passes, though, the Tar Heels faced a third-and-10 situation. Burnett cocked to throw, but he was hit from behind by outside linebacker Levon Kirkland, who had run over Donnalley. The ball popped loose, falling conveniently into the hands of Tiger middle guard Rob Bodine on the Clemson 40.

Though Clemson took a 17-3 lead into the break, without both of its critical defensive efforts the score probably would have been 10-6.

Clemson's main problem in the game had been Burnett, who had completed 14 of 22 passes for 126 yards. And, yes, once again, the Tiger defense stifled that problem, too.

In the beginning of the third quarter, a Mike Faulkerson two-yard run gave the Tar Heels a first-and-10 on their own 31-yard line, and they appeared to be moving again. But on the next play, Burnett dropped to pass and was sandwiched between Kirkland and tackle Chester McGlockton, who knocked him silly for a 5-yard loss.

Burnett eventually left the field under his own power, but the junior was done for the day. In fact, he was still too dazed and confused after the final bell to talk with anyone.

Sophomore replacement Chuckie Burnette held his own but couldn't keep pace, completing 4 of 10 passes for 31 yards.

"I was very pleased with the way Todd Burnett started," Brown said. "I thought he started back today the same way he came out of the Maryland game last week. He had a lot of poise and showed a lot of leadership out on the field."

After Burnett's injury, UNC never recovered. Its 157 yards of offense in the first half — eight more, that is, than Clemson had — fell to 38 in the second half. The time of possession that was so close in the first half (Clemson had a slight advantage at 15:37 to 14:23) got out of hand in the second. The Tigers used two drives that lasted six minutes apiece to take up 21:01 of the second half, hardly enough time for UNC to score 17 points. The 11 first downs achieved by the Tar Heels in the first fell to two in the second.

In the fourth quarter, time restraints forced Burnette to go to the air more than usual. The Tar Heels' final gasp came with 3:29 left in the game, but a 40-yard Gardocki punt left UNC stranded at its own 5-yard line. Burnette fumbled on first down, losing three more yards; Faulkerson was tripped up for no gain on second down; and an incomplete pass fell through the hands of Corey Holliday on third down.

"I think we came into the game as a team with too much pressure on ourselves," freshman tailback Natrone Means said. "We weren't relaxed out there today, and it showed. I don't think we were intimidated. I just think that we wanted to do well so badly that it was affecting us overall."

Another aspect of the game that may have stunted the Tar Heels' performance was the presence of representatives from several bowls, watching not only to check out Clemson but also the upstart Tar Heels. Most of them probably left Death Valley with a favorable impression, but with games remaining against Virginia and Duke, impressions can change quickly.

"They see a very young football team that plays hard and gets excited," Brown said. "They saw us throw the ball and move it some against the number one defensive team in the country. We still have two very emotional games to go, and we need to win one and possibly two of them to have a chance at a bowl."

Until then, though, it's business as usual.

"It's back to work tomorrow," Means said. "It's just like a win. You have to put it behind you."

As they say.

with 28:19 to go. Hershey added a goal and an assist in UNC's four-goal second stanza. Taterosian opened up the scoring for UNC on a penalty corner with 14:44 left in the first half on assists from Anthon and Cox. Buentie tied the game at one for the Terrapins 2:02 later on a penalty corner.

UNC's next step will be the NCAA Tournament, which starts Wednesday. The top four teams in the tourney receive first-round byes and will play Sunday. Pairings will be announced today.

A Clear Choice for the Fourth District

David Price doesn't just talk about issues; he acts.
In two terms, he has worked to:

- ★ restore income tax deductibility for student loans and scholarships
- ★ pass a national literacy and teacher-recruitment initiative
- ★ improve science and math education and technical education programs
- ★ pass the Clean Air and Clean Water acts

As representatives of the UNC Faculty and Staff Committee to Re-elect David Price, we ask your support to keep positive and practical leadership in Congress. Vote for David Price on November 6!
