Pro-democracy demonstrators topple statue of Albanian Communist leader

The Associated Press
 VIENNA, Austria — A jubilant pro-democracy crowd today toppled the giant bronze statue of Communist Albania's founder, Enver Hoxha, that had dominated the heart of the capital of Tirana.
 President Ramiz Alia responded to the protests in the capital and the port city of Durres — where another Hoxha statue was felled — by announcing he would form a new government. It was unclear whether he intended to form a coalition that would include the opposition.
 "I have decided to take into my hands the government and create a new government and a new presidential council," Alia said in a nationally televised broadcast.
 Witnesses said about 500 police around the statue at first fired warning shots to keep about 5,000 demonstrators, who demanded the resignation of the Communist leadership, from its base.
 Some of the police then began embracing demonstrators and allowed them to move to the concrete base of the 30-foot-high statue.
 The protesters pushed against the statue for an hour before it fell, said Ben Ruka, a journalist with the opposition Democratic Revival newspaper.
 Other sources, speaking from the Albanian capital on the telephone, confirmed that the statue had been downed by the sheer weight of the crowd pressing against it.
 No violence was reported.
 The crowds had gathered in Tirana to stage a general strike and join about 700 student and faculty hunger strikers at Enver Hoxha University who are demanding Hoxha's name be dropped from the university.
 Radio Tirana reporter Ilir Ikonomi said the crowd chanted "Hoxha, Hitler," and "Ramiz, you don't know what hunger is."
 They were referring to Alia, Hoxha's successor who in December scrapped 45 years of Stalinist rule.
 Alia promised economic reform and scheduled free multi-party elections March 31.
 The pace of economic and political reform is too slow, however, for many Albanians frustrated by decades of repression and growing poverty.
 Ikonomi, in a telephone interview from Tirana, said he thought as many as 60,000 people gathered on campus. Other estimates varied from 20,000 to 100,000.
 "Some were burning works of Enver Hoxha," Ikonomi said.
 "People are very excited."
 A journalist with the official media, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said that "in most parts of Tirana work is paralyzed" with people obeying a strike call from newly established independent trade union organizations.
 The unions gave just one day's notice of the intent to strike, despite a government decree specifying that planned strikes have to be announced 15 days beforehand.

United States grants Israel financial assistance

The Associated Press
 WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James Baker, moving to ease strains with an old ally, notified Israel on Wednesday it would receive a $400 million housing loan guarantee.
 Baker's telephone call to Foreign Minister David Levy ended an extended diplomatic exchange with Jerusalem over how the funds would be spent.
 It also was the first direct move by the Bush administration to provide special financial assistance to Israel since the Persian Gulf War erupted, imposing further burdens on Israel's already hard-pressed economy.
 Israeli Ambassador Zalman Shoval had complained last week that the Bush administration was giving his government a "run-around" over the housing guarantees. Shoval said Israel "had not received 1 cent in aid" from the U.S.-led coalition to compensate Israel for Iraqi Scud missile attacks.
 Three dozen missiles have struck Israel without Israel retaliating. President Bush and Baker commended Israel for its restraint.
 Baker also has designated Israel a "front-line state" and Margaret Tutwiler, the State Department spokeswoman, said last week the 12-nation European Community and unidentified other governments had been asked to assist Israel's economy.
 Asked this week if the United States
