Vason has made bond of $5,000 and is now a free man, for the time being, in Atlanta, while his attorney, Ben J. Conyers, is preparing to appeal his case on the ground that Vason is entitled to a new trial.

This appeal in Vason's behalf will be vigorously opposed by Luther Z. Rosser, who assisted in the prosecution. As president of the Atlanta Bar Association, Attorney Rosser felt it his duty to take part in the prosecution when requested to do so by his fellow member of the bar, Thomas B. Felder.

Vason's defense was that he was drinking heavily on the night of his altercation with Felder. He very frankly admitted to the jury that "too
