FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1916.

Also matchless—the electric light.

Bill Hearst is always acting like one.

Virginia is also about to do its winter dry cleaning.

The most attractive figures of speech are $19 and $5.

Tomorrow's the last day for registering, Mr. Patriotic Citizen.

What is needed is for some lynchings likewise to get it in the neck.

President Wilson's swing through the west may well be called the "giant swing."

Sure "H" stands for Hughes, also for something else that is about the same thing.

Being considered anybody's property it is hard to make the umbrella stand up to the rack.

Roosevelt yesterday in Chicago visited the stockyards—where he threw the bull, of course.

All volcanoes now seem to be inactive, save Cole Blease, of South Carolina.

The count on November 7 is going to show there is luck in numbers—for the Democratic party.

A number of story writers have come out for Hughes, which confirms suspicion that Hughes' ideas are but fiction.

With his war talk to the Chicago women Colonel Roosevelt must have thought he was addressing a gang of Amazons.

The Republican party is supporting Hughes and Wall Street is supporting (financially) the Republican party.

The Republicans have their hands full trying to convince the workers that they shouldn't vote for Wilson when their dinner pails are full.

Bill Spivens reports that his idea of the devil of a fix is to take a drunk man to the zoo and show him the den of snakes.

Harry Thaw has gone to making political speeches, but his couldn't be any crazier than those the Republican spellbinders are making.

Judging by the amount of damages sought by Jeremiah O'Leary the charges made by Vance McCormick must have certainly hurt his feelings, if not his character.

Of course, the Chicago barber refused to shave the woman customer. He probably knew she couldn't keep her jaw still long enough for him to perform the operation.

The Mexican bandits can't vote on this side of the line, but indications are that they are giving their moral and physical support, on the other side, to their Republican brethren of the United States.

Still the Republicans might also lay claim to the slogan that "the pen is mightier than the sword," meaning the pen of the Wall Street millionaire, who is signing checks for the Hughes' campaign propaganda.

If poor old Mark Twain was now among the land of the living how he would be compelled to admit the fallacy of his idea that there is no new joke, as he beheld Charles Evans Hughes earnestly contending that he does not believe in war.

WILSON DAY TOMORROW.

In jubilation, of course, yet with gratification, the Democrats of the country will tomorrow celebrate Wilson Day. Throughout the land rallies especially appropriate to the occasion will be held; so that appreciation may be expressed of the wonderful work done by the Democratic administration and so that enthusiasm may be added, in order to carry the Democratic banner to victory on November 7. It is a day upon which the laboring men and the business men can unite in celebrating, if they can come in touch with some form of celebration, or if not to devoutly hope that the present National administration will be retained in power.

Both these classes can unite in this wish, as the Wilson administration has done big things for the masses and for business. It has protected the toiler and defended his rights, and has given him laws that help him advance. It has unleashed the business of the country from the Wall Street shackles and allowed it to progress and prosper.

The farmers of the land can also unite tomorrow in praising Wilson and in working for the retention of the Democratic administration. No administration has done one-tenth as much to benefit the farmers as has the Wilson regime. Not only by advice and by actual work in the rural districts have they been benefited, but funds have been placed at their disposal, whereby they have not had to sacrifice their crops, but have been able to hold and market them at a profit.

All classes can join tomorrow in paying tribute to Woodrow Wilson and in pledging themselves to work for his re-election.

NOW THE HIGH TARIFF.

What time yesterday he was not devoting to emphasizing the fact that he would stand for Americanism, like a man who finds it necessary to belittle "I am honest," or hitting the Wilson Mexican policy in the dark, Charles Evans Hughes was engaged in declaring for a high tariff. Back in the especial part of the country where men have grown to be millionaires off a high tariff, which meant that the few were favored in preference to the many; that American goods were sent abroad and sold for less money than they were sold to American consumers; that anything that would tend to decrease the cost of living in the United States, which would interfere with the ideas of the plutocrats to obtain swollen dividends, were taxed so that importation was virtually impossible. Hughes thought it a good time to yell for a high tariff, just the same as he thought it a good time to yell for certain foreign policies when in the midst of those who wanted a change; to take his stand, in utterances, for peace, when in the midst of the peace loving people of the middle west; to shout against the Adamson eight-hour bill, as a "hold-up," when rubbing shoulders with railroad officials and to turn about and call the same legislation a "gold brick" for the toilers, when men in overalls, came in sight. Mr. Hughes makes speeches to suit all tastes.

The tariff is not an issue in this campaign, and simply because there will be a tariff commission, composed of experts, to adjust the matter. If the tariff was an issue the Democrats would have nothing to apologize for, as their revision has not proven a failure and it is well known, being admitted in some instances by even William H. Taft, that the Republican tariff was iniquitous. "Indefensible" was Mr. Taft's characterization of the "wool schedule."

Even if the tariff was a vital issue and the Democrats could not justify their position against "protection," there would be too many other important issues for the people to cling to this one Republican policy and desert the many benefits that the Democratic administration has showered upon them.

ABOUT TO LOSE MONOPOLY.

It is noticed that a gentleman named Sapp (paragraphers will kindly refrain from connecting his name with his head) has announced that he will run for congress in a South Carolina district two years hence. Does this mean that the Old North State is to lose its monopoly upon the business of having candidacies announced years and years in advance, North Carolina has long enjoyed, as enjoyment of politics goes, the distinction of having candidates run years ahead of campaign time and for future candidates to push to the front even before the nominee of their party had been elected. Now South Carolina threatens to trespass upon this privilege; to become a party to this business. However, candidacy for congress for two years from now only brings the Palmetto State half way up with North Carolina as to time. This State, according to reports, already has a couple of candidates for governor in 1920—the Hops, Cameron Morrison and Max Gardner.

DOWN IN MEXICO.

Disquieting news from Mexico never comes as a surprise, as the people of that country have not yet passed through the crucial ordeal, so as to emerge enlightened citizens. But unless a man is blind to all signs he must see that the end is nearer; the end of conflict and tragedies. It may not be reached next year or even the year after, but it is nearer. More people of Mexico are beginning to think; have commenced to ponder over the horrors and the uselessness of war. This is reflected in many ways. Mainly through the loathsomeness of Mexicans to join the fighting forces. It is true they do join, but largely through compulsion. They stand in fear of their lives—and so they have to fight, to stand at least some chance of preserving them. But this very reluctance shows that they are beginning to appreciate what war has done for their country and what peace can do. Another sign is found in more of the learned men of Mexico coming to the front, in effort to bring about peace.

Some of the shrewdest rascals are still stirring up strife, of course, but their ranks are growing thinner. There will be more bloody clashes; plenty of them, but the end is drawing nearer. Time is getting ripe when it will probably be possible, as the climax to some big upheaval and slaughter, to sow the seeds of civilization by enlightenment, and to behold them grow; not to be covered under a mass of ruins of lives and homes.

HERE TO STAY.

Preparations hurry on for Wilmington's corn show, which is this year going to be bigger and better than ever. Yet as large as it will be this time it will be larger in years to come. Not only is this prospect held out, but it is declared that a permanent home will be obtained for the fair. This means that it has passed beyond the experimental stage and has become a fixture. It means more. It will be given each year on a most elaborate scale and will thus add to the benefits to be derived from such. There will be more glitter and glare, but the main object will not be lost sight of. It will always present, as the real jewel, unhampered by fancy setting, the agricultural and industrial resources of this section. It has been by making such substantial exhibits, bearing information; not simply being flimsy entertainment, enjoyed today and forgotten tomorrow that, the corn show has become such a big success and won permanency.

Tomorrow is the last day for registration, and every voter should know that his name is on the books. Unless a person is registered and properly registered he cannot vote on November 7th. It is most important that every man vote. This is not contained solely in the fact that this is a crisis in the American nation, but it is the duty of every man to vote; exercising the highest privilege that can be accorded any man and fulfilling one of the gravest of all duties.

Every voter in New Hanover county should be registered for re-election. If you have not placed your name on the books, go do so at once. If you merely think your name is there, go by the place of registration and see.

Something has set the head of the Hon. Ed Britton, of the Raleigh News and Observer, in a whirl. Whether the pretty maidens at the State fair, the bright prospect of Raleigh land, the farm loan bank, or the chance of a Wilson landslide we knoweth not, but something has set the wheels spinning merrily in his dear cranium. Listen to this from The News and Observer:

"Durham, we pause to remark, has a hill to climb to get the Farm Loan Bank, while Greensboro will find high water in the Brooks it has to cross. The application of Greensboro was made yesterday by Hon. Aubrey L. Brooks and that of Durham by Hon. John Sprunt Hill."

The esteemed Charlotte Observer yesterday greeted its readers with a huge special issue, an industrial and agricultural edition, which covered the great things the State has done and is doing. It was a work of mental and mechanical art, and presented a most roseate picture of the Old North State. The information contained between the attractive covers of the special edition is not only interesting, but inspiring.

Mr. Hughes keeps talking about preserving American integrity and yet assails the President's international policy, but continues to indulge in vagaries. He persists in dealing with generalities, thus making it indefinitely definite. He has refused to tell, or has evaded such answer, if he would have broken off diplomatic relations with Germany when the Lusitania was sunk or would have prohibited the shipment of munitions of war. He no doubt will decline to say whether or not he would have asked for the withdrawal of Ambassador Dumba and Captains von Papen and Boy-Ed. What would he have done in such cases?

Neglect of children's colds often lays the foundation of serious lung trouble. On the other hand, it is harmful to continually dose delicate little stomachs with internal medicines or to keep the children always indoors.
