LUMINA MOVIES TONIGHT. Lumina takes on additional attractions, beginning tonight, when the Lumina open-air theatre opens the season, presenting, every evening, the latest in motion pictures, for the enjoyment and edification of the throngs who crowd the place every night.

The management for this season have made fortunate arrangements for presenting the very best and newest pictures the market affords and this is a feature that will appeal to many.

For opening night—tonight—a very appropriate special feature has been booked, a two reel comedy production, "Jolted Justice," in which figure a bevy of beautiful bathing girls, some Hula Hula dancers, a flirty judge and his wife, who is leader of the Purify League. It's said to be a roar from beginning to end and will repay everyone who hesitates on tonight's east veranda for a half hour's wait.

Another feature on tonight's bill is "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine, which is an educational and instructive feature.

Belk-Williams Company

land's navy enrollment consisted of 150,000 men when the war began. She has over a million today. "These are some of the things I mean when I mention the grand scale of preparation, and this must be our scale if we are to be effective. "We must tell the people the simple truth and the basic facts. "We must tell the story of how the war began, and the facts that went before. "Tell the story of Belgium. "Tell the story of the shooting of Nurse Edith Cavell and Captain Fryatt. "Tell the story of Rheims Cathedral. "Tell the shocking story of the Belgian deportations. "Tell the story of the starving prisoners of war in Germany. "Tell over again the story of the Lusitania, the Arabic and the Sussex. "Tell the story of the sinking of the Red Cross hospital ships. "Tell the story of German machinations in this country since the war began. "Throw the full light on these and every other phase of the war that will quickly lead the people to understand the kind of enemy we are fighting. "Then, and not before then, can the full force of this great country's man power and resources be made effective for war. "And then we heard Major Charles F. Gordon. You know him. He is best known as Ralph Connor. "Black Rock." We knew him better when he was "Ske Pilot" came into our libraries to make us better men. We knew him as a moral valiant force when we read his "Man from Glengarry." We appreciated his breadth in "The Foreigner," and his rich, warm, human heart in "The Doctor." Major Gordon has written many books which make the world better, and now he is offering all he has to offer his country in our common struggle. "He is a tall, earnest man, with a refined determined face. He stands as erect as you would expect a soldier to stand, chooses his powerful words with ease and talks from experience. He has been in the front line trenches. He has charged at the head of his Highlanders across No Man's Land, so we lived a lifetime in a few months, has been seriously wounded, and is now on furlough recuperating. When he rose to speak the applause which started in a ripple gradually grew in volume until the traffic of Broadway was drowned and the whole Astor Hotel seemed to shake with the fervor of it for full ten minutes. They stood and cheered him to an echo. "In accepting the splendid tribute he said: "Such an ovation is not for me, but for my comrades; and after seeing them on the job I know they are worthy of it. "Permit me to quote from this quiet, forceful man of whom Canada is so justly proud: "The United States has declared war on the moral issue. Had you not done so we could not feel towards you as we feel today. "Business men are running this war. A few fighting men accept their duty on the battle line, but on you business men lies the weight of this war. "It is so easy to do our fighting by proxy. It is so natural to think of the trench man as the only man, but we will win this war, if we win it, not so much by those who throw the bomb and drive the bayonet through, as by those earnest men and women behind the lines who keep the supplies coming up. "The Fortunes of War. Let us consider what those words mean. "What if that line of British battle lines were broken through? What if Russia made a separate peace? These things are quite within the "Fortunes of War." "With Russia open to Germany, unlimited supplies would be available for the Germans. The German, Bulgarian, Austrian and Turkish armies could quickly cut Roumania in two, and several million well-trained and splendidly equipped soldiers could be added to the tremendous German forces now engaged with the French and English on the western front. "The consequences of a completely successful submarine campaign must be considered when we think of "The Fortunes of War," and when we think of these things we realize that an immediate, wise, thorough, intense preparation is essential. "Ten months' training for troops is foolishness in this type of war. "Regiments of Canadians have been in the front trenches nine weeks from the day they were mustered in, and they were just as good as the others. "Personally, I would feel pretty safe behind a regiment of your Americans who had been given nine weeks' training. The thing to do is to get going. This nation will never do its part until soldiers are in the front line. We are looking with the same eyes, and feeling with the same hearts. Those long lists of the dead, those yellow telegrams that come to grip the heart and make sacrifice easy. Sacrifices must begin with us—men like you, and when you make the war your business you will be very serious, very glad, and very proud. "The only great sorrow of war is the sorrow of shame. Death is in its right place when it comes along the pathway of duty and along the pathway to eternal glory. "And politics—why, you know, the Irish, the Scotch, the English, and the suffragettes have closed ranks. If labor had demanded its rights the British offensive would have been pitiful. It is wonderful how blood washes out class distinction. Lords and manor boys are fighting shoulder to shoulder with bankers and butchers. "How prone we are to believe that the day of our supreme test is over the horizon. We have known this conflict was coming for years, but I did not believe war was imminent, and I was a fool. "Germany knew absolutely that it was coming, because Germany was making ready for it. "Back of war stands the man of war, and when this struggle has ceased that man will be gone—and his class will be gone—and his fighting machine will be gone, and the world will not work for the glory and good of one but for the good and glory of many. "The smaller nations will win the right to develop to their possibilities. We will have a new regard for ourselves and a new standard by which to measure men. But to attain these heights we must first demonstrate our right to them. "You will appreciate this more when you men join our Canadians in charge across "No Man's Land." Five hundred and sixty men scrambled out of our trenches to sweep forward through the smoke and dust. It was before we had learned to stop when our objective point had been reached, and when the roll call came only 65 rifles reported. "I believe the Y. C. should be pinned on every stretcher-bearer. How well I remember Jimmy. In a snail hole where the stretcher men had stopped for a minute's rest with the officer they were carrying to the rear. Shrapnel bursting everywhere. Shrapnel bursting in the crater, and Jimmy lying face down on top of his officer to protect him from the flying fragments. That wasn't necessary, it wasn't called for, it certainly wasn't orders, but it was Jimmy's way of bringing his man back as nearly whole as he could. "Later, another day, in another shell hole, nineteen men had taken refuge. Shrapnel wiped them out and when we found them Jimmy alone was alive. He insisted upon his official report as his life ebbed away. He gripped himself and started telling me the names of his comrades. Twice he faltered, and a report was ping away. I told him a report was unnecessary, but he looked up at me and said: "Major, I couldn't go without it. I've got to report this," and on sheer nerve named them all; and as he watched me jot the last name in my notebook his eyes glazed, and Jimmy had joined the immortals. "In a little Canadian cottage I recently told his old mother how Jimmy had gone, and how she had pinned the Victoria Cross on his dead breast, and looking up at me through tear-dimmed eyes she said, "I dina grudge me boy. I would nae hae him back. "But this war is not going to be all loss. The future progress of the world will be the reward of our effort, and in God's name get your men there but get them there quickly, and get more ready to go. "Gentlemen, Major Gordon told us the plain, terrible truth. Manufactured peace talk emanating from Germany is made for ears that may stop to listen when every faculty should be strained to the utmost in preparation for our great struggle. "Friends, I would rather my little boy should grow up without the protecting care of a father than to arrive at maturity to learn that I had dodged when I should have been doing. The first call may not draw you into the lines. There may be no place there for you, but there is a place for every man, and we should each find that place, or start immediately preparing to be a cog in the big wheel of events. "We are known to the world as a great commercial nation. We are a great commercial nation. Our cities and towns have thrived more with the manufacture of the utensils of peace than with the making of war munitions. "We stand embodying the ideals of democracy. We still stand as we did when Abraham Lincoln declared us a government "of the people, by the people, for the people." We stand for the freest expression of those things which make for liberty, equality, and the opportunity to develop a higher manhood and a more exalted womanhood. "We have become the world's greatest manufacturers, and the mills have been kept going by a multitude of salesmen who are keynotes of commercial activity. We are upon the threshold of a new day. The east-driven clouds of war are flying low. We can reach out our hands and almost feel their stickiness. But we are going to line up. We are ready to assume our new responsibilities, and we are going to demonstrate that American salesmanship and true citizenship are indeed akin. "What we want in this country are more German-born Americans like Frank Baucker and more native-born Americans as red-blooded as Teddy Roosevelt."
