THEATRE

At yesterday's matinee and night performances at the Royal theatre, Fayssoux demonstrated his power as a mind reader and a hypnotist before very large and interested audiences. Every seat was taken from the footlights to the front doors and after many extra chairs were placed there were many that were forced to stand, but none seemed to mind this inconvenience, as the performances were intensely interesting.

One of the demonstrations of his mental powers was to have a committee hide in the audience such articles as cigars, cards, and matches, and finding them while blindfolded, just as if he knew beforehand that they were there. During the latter part of his performances Fayssoux hypnotized a number of local young men and boys and had them do all sorts of antics for the amusement of his audiences.

Fayssoux's performances are clever as well as clean, and may safely be termed an entertainment for ladies and gentlemen.

Fayssoux and associate entertainers will be seen at the Royal Theatre the balance of this week, giving a matinee every day at the usual hour and one performance during the evening, starting at 8 o'clock.

During the course of tonight's performance Fayssoux will hypnotize one of his subjects and he will be then taken to the furniture store of Sterchi-Baneroff Company, where he will be placed in the window in full view of passers-by and will be made to sleep for 24 hours, and at the end of which time he will be brought back to the Royal Theatre and aawakened in full view of the audience.

"THE SILENT LIE."

Those who remember clearly the different powerful character delineations in "The Birth of a Nation," cannot help recall two of them—the parts played by Miriam Cooper, and the strong role enacted by Ralph Lewis, in the role of "Stoneman," the carpet-bagger.

These two powerful stars of the silent stage will be seen at the Grand tomorrow in one of the most remarkable and forceful Fox productions of the year, "The Silent Lie," supported by a superb cast of Fox players which includes Charles Clary, Monroe Salisbury and Howard Davies.

A gripping story, exceptional bits of photography and a worthy cast are a few of the most notable features in "The Silent Lie."

For the scenes in and about the gambling saloon, located in the great Northwest, the director has picked some of the most lurid character types and actions of the lowest forms of humanity from the book of life and has presented them in a typical R. A. Walsh style, with no attempt to conceal anything. For an artistic sense this point is a notable one, although it will undoubtedly have the effect of a shudder upon those not acquainted with this particular mode of living or for those who find more pleasure of contrast with the more noble and enlightening side of life. The plot is gripping, with action and suspense well maintained until the very last and with an appropriate ending that is entirely satisfying to a very great degree.

A very realistic snowstorm is presented and in fact the snow stuff throughout has been worked up in a style that greatly enhances the value of the production. The direction affords a smooth-running story and is worthy of the highest praise.

MAN WHO MANAGES THE BIG DRAFT

Washington, D. C., July 17.—Not very reassuring to the exactors and others who may desire to escape military service is the fact that the man who is managing the draft is "from Missouri," both figuratively and in reality. He is Brigadier General Enoch H. Crowder, judge advocate general and provost marshal general of the army. General Crowder was born and raised in Missouri and still calls Kansas City his home. He is regarded as the foremost law authority in the army, first by reason of his position as judge advocate general, and second because of the way in which he has filled the responsible place, not perfunctorily or nominally, but with distinction.

Few men in the service of the nation have had more difficult duties to perform than those that have fallen to the lot of General Crowder since war was declared, with Germany. With virtually no precedent to guide him he has been called upon to formulate and put into operation the scheme of registration and drafting. Though various wheels and cogs are the result of suggestions from different officials and departments of the Federal government it is Crowder who has assembled the details and put the machinery into smooth running order. It was he who decided upon the plan of putting the registration and draft into the hands of civilians and of making the county the unit for the registration. He devised the registration cards and directed their distribution and return. And now it is Crowder who is in charge of the great task of selecting the men who are to comprise the first great national army.

General Crowder began his military career as a student at West Point. Soon after his graduation in 1881 he went with his regiment to Fort Brown, Texas, and being of a studious disposition began the reading of law in the office of a Brownsville attorney, and in 1895 he completed his legal education at the University of Michigan. The War Department soon recognized the value of his legal learning and he was appointed to the judge advocate general's department with the rank of major.

General Crowder went to the Philippines in 1898 with the first American expedition, serving as judge advocate of the Department of the Pacific, the Eighth Army Corps and the Division of the Philippines, and was also legal advisor and secretary to the military governor.

In bringing about governmental reforms in the Philippines he distinguished himself and upon his return to the United States he was placed upon the General Staff. He was prominently identified with the organization of the General Staff corps, and as senior member of that body served as chief of staff of the Atlantic Division.

General Crowder has a record in the volunteer service, and in which as in the regular service, he has served in the line as well as in the staff. On June 22, 1898, he was appointed lieutenant colonel and judge advocate of volunteers. On June 20, 1901, he was made brigadier general of volunteers.

During the Russo-Japanese war he was senior American observer with the Japanese army and served until the end of hostilities. He was with Gen. Kuroki's staff and was an eye witness of many of the principal engagements.

General Crowder is nearing his sixtieth year, but is as alert and active as any of the younger officers in the service. He has the true military bearing of the man who has always been engaged more or less in military affairs.

In 1911 he was appointed judge advocate general, which is regarded as one of the highest honors in military circles. Soon after his appointment he was sent on a special mission to Chili. A year ago, when the war cloud loomed on the Rio Grande, it was General Crowder who was called upon to decide the precise status of the army in Mexico, together with other fine points of military and international law involved in our dealings with the southern republic.

The distinction of being the oldest of the State federations of women's clubs probably belongs to the Maine federation, which was organized 25 years ago.

STREET MARKET TO BE OPERATED BY THE FARMERS

State law.

Mr. H. C. Erwin, of Atlanta, representing the Mersey Manufacturing Company, manufacturer of meters, was before Council for the purpose of submitting prices on meters, but was informed that Council could not buy material or equipment in excess of $1,000 without first advertising for bids. The total cost of the meters would have been in excess of this amount and when asked if they could not be bought in installment was given a negative reply, City Attorney Rourke explaining that the city would be obligated for the entire amount regardless of how they were delivered and paid for. He informed Council that some cities got around this phase of the proposition by buying a big quantity and having the invoice made with each shipment show slightly less than the maximum amount allowed, but was told that this could not be done here. Council did agree, however, to advertise for bids on meters, as it is in need of equipment of this nature, and Mr. Erwin was told to make his proposition when his bid was submitted. The matter will probably be disposed of two weeks hence at regular meeting of Council. The accounts of City Tax Collector Walter G. Blair were relieved of a shortage cropped out of the handling of more than $400,000 during the year and it was impossible to find the error.

Mr. Pete Peterson, journeyman plumber, was before Council to ask that he be relieved from paying a license tax, as he was not engaged in the contracting business. After he had explained his case Council agreed that he was not under obligations to pay any license, as he was only working by the day.

DRINK PEPSI-Cola for Healthful Refreshment

Why you should drink PEPSI-Cola
Pure cane sugar, carbonated spring water, fruit juices, acid phosphate and flavoring—that's PEPSI-Cola. No mystery in its recipe; just a proper blending of ingredients—a delightful, wholesome beverage, as beneficial as it is refreshing, as invigorating as it is thirst-quenching. Some people call it a "Liquid Confection"! It is the kind of drink you would make at home—if you could!
