Tuesday's Landslide Augurs Well

TUESDAY'S Democratic landslide is significant in many respects, for there were many issues involved in the contest.

Wets will interpret it as a popular demand for repeal of prohibition; anti-protectionists will claim that it is conclusive proof of the fallacy of high protective tariffs; many students of foreign affairs will be of the opinion that the paramount significance is that the people have turned thumbs down on Hoover's isolationist policies; those who are class conscious will view it as a monumental defeat for millionaires; nearly everybody will see in it a well grounded demand for more governmental economy; to some it will merely mean that the Democrats are in, the Republicans out and there will be a shake-up in the post-office.

There is good basis for all of these conclusions; but the outstanding significance of the election is that the people want a change of leadership. Partisan politics had less to do with the outcome of this election than any we can recall. It was not merely a victory for the Democratic party; it was a mandate from the people. They demand a change, a profound change—not just a new party in power, but new principles and a broader, higher outlook upon the purposes and functions of government.

The task that now rests upon the shoulders of Franklin Delano Roosevelt is no simple one. Failure might prove disastrous. One looks at the strong, kindly features of this man and wonders, "Can he do it; can he pull us out of the morass into which we have fallen?"

No, Roosevelt cannot; no individual could. We might add, parenthetically, that the president-elect has clearly shown that he is not the kind of man who suffers the egotistical delusion of being a "superman," a miracle-worker. But he has convincingly demonstrated that he possesses the necessary qualities of leadership, and the platform upon which he was elected is a sound foundation upon which to build a new and better order.

With both houses of Congress overwhelmingly Democratic, the new administration should be able to take bold strides in bringing about a new day in American life. Of even greater importance than these factors, however, is the solidity of opinion and uniformity of purpose of the American people themselves, as manifested at the polls. They realize the need of change and they are overwhelmingly and determinedly prepared to culminate it. Four years ago, they were still fooling themselves, they still believed in false prophets and false economic policies. Now they know the errors of their ways and are ready to correct them. This change of attitude, to our mind, is even more important than the outcome of the election.

Give to the Red Cross

THROUGHOUT the depression the American Red Cross has convincingly demonstrated that its role is just as important, if not more important, in times of peace as in times of war.

Like a guardian angel it has been the protection of millions of people. Statistics are notably dull, but such as these should be of interest to every thinking person:

Red Cross chapters throughout the country have administered relief to 454,000 families suffering from unemployment evils. The cost was $2,215,000.

Ninety thousand families in coal mining regions have been given assistance at a cost of $522,000.

Over 37 million bushels of flour, supplied by the federal government, has been distributed to needy families through the Red Cross. Forty-five million bushels more is ready to be distributed.

More than 20,000,000 people have found the Red Cross a friend this year. In Macon county there are hundreds of families which have received much needed assistance in the form of flour, clothing and medicine.

Of course, the Red Cross has not solved all the problems of the depression. That is not its task. The business of the Red Cross is to alleviate suffering and none can gainsay that it has accomplished wonders in coping with this tremendous problem.

On Armistice Day the annual Red Cross Roll Call will be conducted throughout Macon county, whose quota is $375. This is not a large sum, when one considers what the Red Cross has meant to our people. Let us all show our appreciation by making the roll call a success.

Many Fake Medicines Have Amusing Names

Medical fakery and quacks have a habit, amusing, were it not so misleading, of dubbing their nostrums with flowery and high-sounding names. In the enforcement of the Federal food and drugs act, the government has seized numerous patent medicines bearing names such as "bear oil," "life wine," "magic trokeys," "life balm," and the like, according to Dr. F. J. Cullen of the Federal Food and Drug Administration.

Following government seizure, the United States marshal recently destroyed several dozen bottles of a medicine labeled "Walker's Old Indian Health Tonic." The preparation, put up by a concern in Atlanta, Ga., consisted of small amounts of magnesium sulphate (Epsom salts), ferric chloride, quinine sulphate, and water. It was labeled as being "the unfailing remedy for laziness and a drowsy, tired, sleepy feeling. For indigestion, dizziness, sick headache, numbness, or chills, kidney or bladder troubles, piles, jaundice, and dropsy, weakness, tired feeling, stimulates and purifies the blood." The government alleged that the article was falsely and fraudulently labeled under the law.

There are patent medicines on the American market which are decidedly useful in the treatment of disease, says Doctor Cullen. "These are generally honestly labeled and ethically advertised. The colored-water and bread-pill fakers, however, generally rely upon fancy names to cover up the worthlessness of their products. Many of these latter are manufactured locally, and not being shipped interstate, do not come within regulatory control of the Food and Drug Administration. The prospective buyer should be on his guard against all medical preparations that are labeled with exaggerated curative claims and that are sold under fanciful, misleading, or reassuring names."

Your Farm - How to Make It Pay

Best Breeds Pay

THE biggest income from poultry in North Carolina is through the sale of eggs and about the only way to measure the value of either males or hens as breeders is the record made by their descendants in producing eggs.

Roy S. Dearstyne, head of the poultry department at State college, says the average flock owner cannot undertake the time and expense necessary to measure this performance and so he suggests that highly bred birds or hatching eggs be secured from time to time from professional breeders.

"The work of accumulating this information about the laying qualities of hens, starts with using only pedigreed males mated in single pens with trap-nested females and in turn trapping this female progeny," says Mr. Dearstyne. "This system is rather expensive but it is the only sound method of determining the true worth of the breeders and in the long run, it pays an extremely high dividend."

Mr. Dearstyne knows this is sound doctrine because he has built up the poultry flocks at State college by following such a system. For instance, he has a Leghorn hen that produced 178 eggs in one year and yet this hen has two daughters that produced 282 and 208 eggs respectively last year. Some of the other records are even more startling. A Rhode Island Red hen that produced only 136 eggs in one year has five daughters which produced 252, 245, 231, 228 and 211 eggs each.

This was not due to feeding because similar records were kept on 25,000 birds in the demonstration flocks over the state which do not show such increases. Then, too, records on 800 birds at the college poultry plant show 41,600 eggs increase with little increase in the feeding cost, he says.

The Farmer's Question Box

Timely Questions Answered by N. C. State College Experts

Question: My cowpeas and soybeans show very little growth and many spots have died. What is the cause of this and what can I do to correct this trouble?

Answer: The cause of the plants failing to show good growth and dying in isolated spots is the dry weather and the resultant hard soil. The extreme dry weather this year has caused many crops to fail and some of them to die where the soil was hard. Due to this condition the roots could not grow deep enough to maintain contact with the lower water table and the crops made poor growth.

Question: Will the use of electric lights with my chickens during the fall and winter months give greater egg production?

Answer: Much investigational work has been conducted along these lines during recent years and uniformly good results have been obtained. The use of lights will increase the working hours for the flock which will bring a greater consumption of feed and a corresponding increase in egg production. While eggs produced in this way are often used for hatching, this practice is not recommended as the chicks will, as a rule, be weak and subject to all poultry ills.

Eradicate Scale

FEW home orchardists realize the damage done to valuable fruit trees by scale insects. Once this trouble gets started in an orchard, it spreads rapidly and soon infests the trees in a large area before the owner realizes the extent of sprad or the damage being done.

"There are few orchards in the state not infested with scale and this infestation should be eradicated with spray before any new growth begins next spring," says C. H. Brannon, extension entomologist at State college. "Examine the trees to determine the amount of scale present as infestation spreads rapidly. We have been using oils with considerable success in scale control and especially is such a spray valuable where oyster shell scale or scurfy scale is known to occur. Lime-sulphur was the standard spray for years and if this is thoroughly applied at the proper strength, it will eradicate the ordinary infestations."

Good results in controlling scale depends upon three things, Brannon says. First, the proper material must be obtained; second, it must be correctly mixed, and, third, it must be carefully and thoroughly applied. A great deal depends upon the spraying machine used. Good results cannot be obtained with a broken-down, worn-out machine.

Because spraying has been neglected to a great extent during the past two or three years, scale insects are on the increase in North Carolina and for that reason the Extension service at state college has prepared a spraying schedule for both apples and peaches which may be had on application, either to Mr. Brannon or the publications office of the college.
