Rector

SUNDAY
No services Sunday, May 28. On June 1 the Rev. N. C. Hughes, of Hendersonville, will arrive to carry on the services for the summer months. On the night of Sunday, June 4, Bishop Kirkman Finlay of South Carolina will preach in this church.

BY REV. NORVIN C. DUNCAN
It is remarkable how much of the world surrounds us, even though our physical range is limited to a small corner. For weeks I have been within the confines of a room, with my outlook limited to a window; yet from this bed I see many of the moving drama of life.

Just a few feet away from the window a pair of blue birds have built a nest. It helps to pass away the hours to watch them as they carry food to their young all the day long. Here is the age-old drama of life, Love and Sacrifice; in the note of joy is the expression of Life's creative urge, and the toil and the sacrifice.

On the sidewalk close by a tree are a young man and a young woman in a romantic setting. It is near sundown; shadows and late sunbeams mingle with the twitter of birds. The young man and the young woman are smiling, jesting, love-making. Here again is the urge, the beauty, the grandeur, the tragedy, the mystery of Life, which eventually culminates in gray locks, feeble step and, finally, death. But let us thank God for the love of these young people, the songs of the birds, the beauty of flowers, the music of the winds, sweet memories of other days; prophecies of unfolding flowers, of unbroken friendship, eternal experiences of Life at its best.

Muse's Corner

THE STEAM SHOVEL

Mr. Ashear is beginning to build a store,
Which you have heard about before,
Though what I want to bring to you
Is what he started out to do.
After hauling the old houses away
They undertook to move the clay.

With a bunch of men I'll say eleven—
And trucks—Perpaps somewhere 'round seven—
They made a drive to skim the top;
But soon were glad, of course, to stop.

After having a little gentle shower
They said "we need more speed and power."

And so they called on the State
For something more powerful and great
To raise a mighty pile of sand
They could not lift by human hand—
Which looked to be too wide and high
And deep for any crowd to try.

So when the roaring engine came
Those little boys got awful tame
To see that smoke and steam and oil
Begin to pop and crack and boil;
Though it just lasted a day
When that "Old Steam Shovel" Carried it Away."

IS THE STATE BENT FOR HELL?

Carolina may be making a great mistake, but if they do and discover it they will be no less vigorous in outlawing evil than their fathers were before. There never was a time when there was not wickedness and evil in North Carolina, and there never was a time when there was not far more good among the people of the state. North Carolina may make a mistake, but not because of moral failure in its people.

"Joint" is defined in the dictionary as "a place of meeting or resort for persons engaged in evil and secret practices," and Mr. Peterson chooses to apply it to a place where beer is sold. But for generations, in the most civilized countries in the world, men and women of the utmost respectability have gathered to talk, to listen to music, and to dance, in halls and gardens where they may quaff their beer at will. It has not been observed that the Englishmen and Frenchmen and Germans and Americans who have engaged in this sort of diversion are any less decent than the people of North Carolina and other regions where beer-drinking has been written down in the statutes as a sin.

And so with horse-racing and the laying of wagers thereon. The populations of European countries where the sport flourishes have not been degraded by it. Maryland and Kentucky, only a little way from us, have permitted horse-racing for many years, and nobody has ever been able to discern that, in respect to morals and behavior, the citizens of those commonwealths suffer in comparison with North Carolinians.

We suspect that one of the hypotheses mentioned by the News and Observer, that "the people are no longer willing to be regulated in their behavior by preachers and others who hold to traditional morality of the Protestant churches," contains more than a grain of truth. But for "morality" we would substitute "austerity" or "interdictions." The "death of protest" against the beer and horse-racing enactments is probably a reflection of the relief which vast numbers of North Carolinians feel at having restored to them the privilege of regulating their own conduct. They feel a loosening of the ecclesiastical fingers on their windpipe, and they like the sensation.

No doubt the Raleigh Times is not far from the truth when it says: "The North Carolina public is just now in a mood to welcome with open arms the return to it of liberties and mild indulgencies whittled away through the years by generations of politicians who, while working in the main for the good of the state, were fearful of giving offense to what was really a straight-laced minority dictatorship of morals carrying with it more than a suggestion of the old New England excess in Puritanism and tendency to subvert judicial processes for the pleasure of burning a witch."

Even the citizens who are willing to surrender some of their liberties and to forego their mild indulgencies have come to realize that Prohibition has not diminished the evil of excessive drinking and that the outlawing of horse racing and betting on the races has not kept from gambling anybody who wants to gamble. There is a general public recognition of the futility of the repressive laws which were put upon the books by the high-powered propaganda of the unco guid.

Is North Carolina bent for hell? We don't believe it is. The recent enactments as to beer and racing seem to us to indicate, rather, that the people of the state have acquired a little more commonsense and have become a little more tolerant. — THE CHAPEL HILL WEEKLY.

Dr. Max Nenius, a Chicago chemist, who has devoted 50 years of his life to the study of beer, announces that the 3.2 per cent brew now legal is the perfect beer.

1st Boy—So this is silver ore. I never saw any before! How do they get the silver out of it?
2nd Boy—They smelt it.
1st Boy—That's funny. I smelt it and I couldn't get any silver out of it.
