

Economic Balance between Agriculture and Industry One of TVA's Chief Goals

 nation, Mr. Woolrich declares, there has set in a diffusion of industry into agricultural districts. After two centuries of concentration of industry in large centers, he maintains, the drift is toward a break-up of these centers. He bases his contention on the improvement of transportation, the vanishing of the necessity for workers' homes to huddle under the shadow of factory chimneys, of workmen being bound to the manufacturing plant by the trolley lines and sidewalks.

Intelligent Assistance
 Under TVA planning the Tennessee Valley has become an arena for the development of forces already at work. There is no attempt at forcing a change that is contrary to progress, Mr. Woolrich insists. It is simply the intelligent assistance of an orderly and progressive shift.

There is a distinct trend throughout the South on the part of the producer to move a step closer to the consumer. In this respect it is pointed out by Mr. Woolrich, that it is just as reasonable for the farmers to co-operatively open a starch factory to convert their surplus potatoes into starch as it is for the individual farmer to churn butter and thus move a step nearer the consumer.

Tennessee is a great sorghum state. Practically every farmer has his own sorghum press upon his farm and sells his syrup in the local markets. But the one great complaint seems to be that there is no uniformity. Some Tennessee sorghum syrup is rated as the best, other syrup from the same district may be very poor. Varying methods and changing conditions provide the answer to the question.

Work Co-operatively
 The answer is plain, say those who have studied the program. The farmer must work co-operatively to set up small sorghum plants to be run by experts who will turn out uniform grades of syrup and build up a sure and satisfied market. And gradually the farmer seems to be leaning toward such a move. And as he leans the TVA experts are there to help him in the right direction.

The Tennessee hills, declares Mr. Woolrich, are peopled by individualists, men of initiative and resourcefulness who are quick to see when there is a chance to better their lot. As an example Mr. Woolrich tells the story of the Tennessee farmer, who, when his cash crops failed, turned to broom making.

The farmer had no capital. But his methods and procedure showed that he had initiative and resourcefulness. He grew his own broom straw. He made a hand lathe to turn out broom handles from his own wood. He invented and made a tying machine to bind the brooms. When his product was finished he took the brooms out and sold them. He made no fortune, but he did pull himself through the depression.

Points the Way
 The individual case here points out the way, Mr. Woolrich states. What this farmer tried to do on his own could really be profitably done by communities who could utilize the materials at hand and move a step closer to the consumer.

On the denuded slopes where erosion is doing its destructive work the farmers are planting crops of Japanese clover, a hardy, fast-growing clover crop. But all existent seeders are useless for sowing this type of seed. Back in the hills an agriculture expert found the farmer who had worked out the problem for himself. He had punched holes in the sides of tin cans, mounted them on a shaft, filled the cans with clover seed. He rolled his home-made seeder up and down the hill and his planting was done.

With this type of agricultural population, of which these two men are the rule rather than the exception, Mr. Woolrich states that a balance between industry and agriculture can be worked out.

Education Program
 Steadily the agricultural advisers under TVA are pushing back into the hills with their program of education, showing the farmers how they can supplement their incomes by building up their own industries to utilize their raw materials and spare time.

As the agricultural experts advance there comes from the Valley the song of the swift-rushing Tennessee. And the song of that rushing is cheap power. The slim black cables are climbing the hills to work a tremendous change in the habits and methods that have changed little down the years.

For the cheap power coming in on the cables means small industries, the possibility of making those things for themselves that they have had to forego. This is the goal before the TVA here, small community workshops to supplement the incomes of the farmers, and thus raise the agricultural standards, giving these people a purchasing power to flow to the large centers for those goods and commodities which they cannot produce themselves.

And with the workshops should come all those things for which young men and women left the quietness of the hills, the good roads, electric lights, better homes and schools. All these things, say the planners, follow the wires of cheap power.

SCHOOLGIRL FROCK

Pattern 8004—Here is a smart and attractive little frock which will appeal to the schoolgirl. The collar which is cut on sailor lines is always well liked by the younger generation, because it is so generally becoming. The front yoke may be omitted, for the dress is complete without it, as shown in the small view.

Of course short sleeves are very nice and so popular, but long sleeves are extremely comfortable, when wintry winds do blow, so the pretty ones given in the pattern will keep the small wearer both warm and well-dressed. The panels in the skirt which end in pleats in front and back are trim and stylish and give lots of room for running and other forms of exercise. A dark blue serge is the classic materials for such a design, but it would be charming in one of the gay new plaids or checks.

WATCH YOUR KIDNEYS!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering impurities from the blood stream. But kidneys get functionally disturbed—lag in their work—fail to remove the poisonous body wastes.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, attacks of dizziness, burning, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains; feel "all worn out."

Don't delay! For the quicker you get rid of these poisons, the better your chances of good health.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They tend to promote normal functioning of the kidneys; should help them pass off the irritating poisons. Doan's are recommended by users the country over. Get them from any druggist.
