AGE in business

I know a New York business man who says he is all through with hiring young men and young women for jobs that call for intelligence, industry and attentiveness. He replaced his girl switchboard operator the other day with a man of fifty, and says that for the first time people who call up from the outside get courteous attention and his outgoing calls are handled promptly and efficiently.

He has a woman of forty-odd, a widow with several children, as head of his stenographic staff. She doesn't waste his time and money by using the office telephone to make dates with boy-friends, nor does she rebel against overtime work in emergencies. Moreover, she takes pains to understand what her job is all about.

About the only reason for hiring young folks is that they come cheap. It takes a long time for most of them to learn what work really means, my friend says, and to learn how to work efficiently. Many never do.

I think he is more than half right.

SOFT and selfish

I was struck by a phrase uttered a little while ago by the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, Episcopal Bishop of Long Island. "Our great problem," he said, "is the number of intelligent people who are morally unemployed."

He was talking about the great mass of "good" people who have grown so soft that they are unwilling to do anything that involves sacrifice or inconvenience, even though they might be of service to individuals or to the social order.

I am not quite in agreement with Dr. Stires' suggestion that the enthusiasm and self-sacrifice of great masses of people for the causes of Sovietism, Nazism and Fascism indicates a better moral tone than we have in America. I think most of the popular enthusiasm for those causes is the result of force and terrorism, and I am not at all convinced that the real enthusiasts, the leaders, are making any personal sacrifices.

I am fully in accord, however, with the idea that we have been bringing up a generation composed largely of those who put self-gratification first in its code and are too soft and lazy to give serious attention to anything else.

GLAMOR of the city

Twenty-two college girls from Missouri came to New York on a sightseeing trip a week or two ago. They were tremendously disappointed in the city as a show place. Skyscrapers didn't interest them; they expected to see something of the glamor of metropolitan life as pictured in the movies. All they saw was a lot of uninteresting, rather narrow streets, with people who dressed and looked about like those back home.

As a "show" city New York doesn't begin to compare with Chicago, where every natural beauty has been enhanced by the wonderful system of parks and connecting boulevards and the water front has been made into the most valuable aesthetic asset the city has. The glamor of New York is for the initiated alone. All that a stranger can get of it is what he can pay for. He can buy theater seats or be neatly trimmed in night-clubs, but the real life of New York is not on public view. Someone said not long ago that while New York is the largest city in America, Chicago is the largest American city. Having lived a good many years in each, I think that is a fair comment.

WIND in Buffalo

One of my earliest childhood memories is of my father saying to me: "When you see a man who grabs hold of his hat before he turns any street corner, you can be sure he comes from Buffalo." I have known Buffalo, more or less, for more than sixty years. I lived there for ten continuous years, from 1891 to 1901. I learned there to scoff at the notion that Chicago was entitled to be called the "Windy City." We used to be proud of our wind in Buffalo.

Now comes, along the U. S. Weather Bureau and says that Buffalo last year was first among cities in the number of days on which the wind blew faster than 32 miles an hour; it had 97 such days. Chicago was 'way down toward the bottom of the list, with only six days of high winds.

But, after living for several years in Chicago, also, I want to remark that when the wind blows off Lake Michigan you know it! Also, that the hottest winds I ever encountered are those that come to Chicago from the West, across a thousand miles of sunbaked prairie.

FAKES in the news

The other day a news story came in from India telling of the discovery of the remains of a tribe of pigmy people only 15 inches tall, together with the bones of a tiny horse of proportionate dimensions. A few days later a doctor reported to a medical convention in New Orleans that an African native woman had recently given birth to six children at one time, going Mrs. Dionne one better.

It turns out that the pigmy story was invented by a Hindu who held the current superstition among his people that one can avert bad luck by starting a rumor that everybody will believe, and that the same story about the African sextuplets was printed in 1903 and disproved soon thereafter.

CATTLE RANCH ROUTINE

The great events of the ranchman's year are the round-up, when stock is taken, the cattle are branded, and such full-grown cattle gathered into a herd as are suitable for market; and the departure of the herds for market or port. In the South there is but one annual round-up, on the ranges of Wyoming, the Dakotas, Colorado and Montana there are two round-ups in the year—one early in spring, to brand the calves and ascertain the losses during winter, the other in autumn, when the steers over three years old are separated from the main herd and sent for sale.
