WAR our gold

There is a world war going on that we see nothing much about in the newspapers. It is a war for the possession of gold. Every important industrial nation in the world is in this war, the ones that have plenty of gold trying to keep what they have, and those which are short of gold trying to get it away from those which have it. It affects almost everybody in the world, and is the great obstacle in the way of the revival of world trade.

England began it, first by selling silver from its Indian stocks, then by going off the gold standard in 1931 and offering higher prices for gold than the world had ever heard of. Much, if not most, of the world-wide depression, including our share of it, is due to England's efforts to get more gold. We countered by bidding up gold from about $20 an ounce to $35, and so have stopped the British drain on our gold stocks. France and the group of nations associated with her in the "gold bloc" have so far stood pat. They have more gold than they need, and England's latest move is to try to force gold out of those countries by depreciating the pound sterling to the lowest point yet reached.

Many of my friends who understand such things say that the only hope of world price recovery is in breaking the French-Netherlands-Swiss gold corner and compelling those countries, also, to devalue their currencies.

MONEY international trade

The only measure of value in international trade is metal—gold or silver. All money must be, in the long run, based on one or the other or both of those metals. The only way a nation that is short of gold can get more gold is to sell its goods in international trade. By offering a higher price for gold than other nations—that is, by reducing the value of its own currency—one nation can gain an advantage over others. A dollar is still a dollar inside the United States, and a pound is still a pound in England. But the foreigner wanting to buy our goods can buy more dollars with his own gold than he could a year or so ago, and he pays us, in the long run, in dollars.

We have been doing pretty well lately, since we nationalized gold and devalued the dollar. Our export trade has increased and we are adding to our national stock of gold many millions of dollars a week. Now we have more than 8 1/2 billion dollars of gold, and less than that amount of currency and bank-notes outstanding against it.

England is not in quite such a good position. She has only about half as much gold as she has currency in circulation. That is why she is underbidding all the rest of the world in the markets of the world, for her export commodities—overbidding them all for gold.

France has even more gold in proportion to currency than we have. France still values the franc at the figure to which it was reduced in 1925. Germany, on the contrary, has 45 times as much currency issued as it has gold coverage. My guess is that the French gold corner will be broken and then we will have another international monetary conference which France will not break up, as it did the last one.

DISCIPLINE an asset

I hear from several sources that the young men who have had six months or a year in the CCC camps are being given preference by employers who have jobs to fill. The reason is that these boys are, first, necessarily healthy and strong, but principally because they have learned what discipline means.

any sort of a job until he or she has learned how to take orders and follow instructions. Nobody, for that matter, is fit to give orders unless he or she has first learned how to take them.

The best boss to work for is one who has grown up in the business and knows how to do everything he calls on his help to do. The worst worker on any job is the one who thinks he knows better than the boss how to run the shop.

CHARACTER a tribute

How soon the world forgets the man who never did anything but make money; and how long it remembers the one whose character lifted him above his fellow-men.

Think of the "great" men of history. Nine out of ten of them live in memory because of their service to others. That is the highest test of character, whether a man puts his own selfish interests first or those of the social order in which he finds himself.

Those are some of my reflections after reading the dispatches reporting that Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes was dying on the eve of his 94th birthday. Few men of our time have so won the esteem and respect of the whole nation. And that is because few men have given themselves so fully and so ably to the service of the nation.
