

Managed Flocks Well All Winter

December and January slump in production experienced by North Carolina poultry flocks heavily into the profits that should be made during the winter. This abnormal slump is not found in flocks that receive the best care and management, said Parrish, extension poultry specialist at State College.

In a study of North Carolina flocks, the extension poultry specialist found reason to believe that much of the slump is due to poor housing conditions and errors in feeding and management. The two most common mistakes in housing are: failure to provide adequate space for the birds and failure to protect them from cold drafts, Parrish pointed out. There should be at least four square feet of floor space for each bird to be housed, he continued. The birds may be kept warm by making them draft-proof, and providing means of closing the fronts on cold days and nights.

The most common mistake in feeding is that of trying to economize, Parrish stated. Birds should be fed liberally on a balanced ration consisting of mash and grains, and an all-mash ration, he went on to say. Keep the feed before the birds all times in waste-proof hoppers. The birds should have plenty of clean, warm water. It will also help give them a supplementary feed of young, tender green feed when available.

Only Inferior or Dead Timber for Fuel

At this season farmers interested in improving their woodlands should go through their timber stands and remove their fuelwood by removing the dead, crippled and diseased trees.

The healthy trees that remain should be thinned lightly so that they can make straight, vigorous growth, advises the State college extension service and Charles H. Flory, forester of the soil conservation service.

But do not thin too heavily, he warned, as the light coming through the tops of the trees should reach the ground floor of the forest only in small spots. As the sun passes overhead the lighted spots will gradually move, thus any place on the ground will not be cleared out too much.

Although young trees growing under older ones need a certain amount of light, too much light will do more damage than good.

In natural woods there is an abundance of shrubby vegetation, wild grasses, and weeds. Grazing of woodlands not only destroys this protecting vegetation, but also packs the ground by trampling and thus increases the run-off water, which would otherwise be largely absorbed where it falls.

Nature's Gift

Two London cabmen were glaring at each other. "Aw, what's the matter with you?" demanded one. "Nothing's the matter with me."

"You gave me a narsty look," persisted the first. "Well," responded the other, "now you mention it, you certainly have a narsty look. But I didn't give it to you."
