Cheap Mixed Feeds May Prove Costly

The farmer who buys livestock feeds according to price tags only may find that he has indulged in a bit of false economy, declares Dr. J. O. Halverson, animal nutritionist at the North Carolina experiment station.

The cheapest feeds are not always the most economical, Dr. Halverson points out, and especially is this true in the case of mixed feeds high in fiber content but low in feed value.

Proteins, fats, and carbohydrates make up the food value in mixed feeds, while fiber only adds weight and bulk and is harder to digest.

Dr. Halverson cautions farmers always to read the feed tag or the list of ingredients printed on the bag when buying mixed feeds. In this way he can be sure of the percentages of protein and crude fiber.

As an example, the nutritionist points out that cottonseed meal containing 41 per cent protein costs more than that containing only 30 per cent, yet the higher priced feed may well be worth the difference in price.

This difference in protein content is due to the amount of hulls ground with the meal. The more hulls, says Dr. Halverson, the more bulk and weight, but the less protein and other food elements.

Not only is this true with cottonseed meal, but with wheat middlings and shorts as well. The more bran used, the lower the protein content and the larger the amount of crude fiber.

Some of the feeds that should be studied are: alfalfa, cottonseed, linseed, flax, milk, oat, wheat, corn, and soybean products, the nutritionist declares.

Queen Elizabeth, daughter of the much married Henry VIII, was a spinster.

The imitation of antiques is an art so highly developed that even connoisseurs are duped from time to time.
