Many Women Working On Red Cross Bandages; More Workers Needed

By MRS. CHARLES MELICHAR

In Franklin's Red Cross room, upstairs in the Leach building, things are brisk and business like. At long tables, women in crisp, clean wash dresses, their hair carefully covered, work, rolling bandages for the armed forces, from 2 o'clock until 5 every afternoon from Tuesday through Friday, on Sunday afternoons after 2:30, and on Tuesday and Thursday nights beginning at 7:30.

No coats or purses are tossed on the tables, but charts line the tables before each worker, for the bandages must be precisely folded. Business-like, too busy for visiting, these ladies are attempting to turn out the 46,200 dressings that were sent to Franklin urgently needed by our armed forces. The women of America working for the Red Cross must make 90 percent of all dressings.

Macon county averages 20 women every day, working on bandages, but Franklin is still a month behind on the ones that have been asked for.

Seventeen Franklin women, trained by Mrs. J. E. Perry, chairman of production, who attended the classes required for the work, have accepted the responsibility of acting as instructors, and two of them are in charge whenever the room is open.

Expertly, as fast as bandages are folded, they are wrapped and are placed, ready for mailing, on shelves that line one end of the room.

Other people of Macon county, too have helped toward the success of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Leach donated the use of the Red Cross room in their building. Heat for the room is furnished by L. B. Phillips. The Nantahala Power Co. donated a desk for use in the room, while carpenters of the Power Co. on their own time, made the shelves. Wood for these shelves was given by the Zickgraf Lumber company.

Vic Perry and the Franklin Girl Scouts each gave their ping pong table for use of the workers. Chairs were given by the American Legion. Other tables were brought from the old Red Cross rooms.
