

T. W. Bryson, Fisherman, Appears As Expert Cook

The following article appeared recently in the Asheville Citizen. As it will be of interest to many of our readers here it is reprinted in full:

T. D. Bryson, Jr. of Franklin, the fellow with an eye for tasty morsels, still is enthusiastic about good eating on hunting trips. . . hundreds of his nimrod friends in this section will again keep tab on his concoctions this season and more than likely will take advantage of his invitations and get in on some of his parties. . . today we have a batch of his new menus and old stand-bys and are going to pass 'em on. . . his last letter read as follows:

"Dear Chief: This season of the year usually brings to the surface many of the primitive instincts which are usually satisfied by hunting trips. Now that comfortable hunting camps are available and motor roads make the heretofore inaccessible places easily approached, it isn't a difficult matter to go amply provided with an excellent supply of foodstuffs; the only drawback is lack of knowledge of its preparation. I well remember most of my trips in earlier years, accompanied by the ever faithful frying pan and coffee bucket—practically little else. With only these utensils, however, really excellent meals can be prepared. Here it comes, but please bear in mind that I said an excellent variety of food can now be easily transported to the camp.

"Coffee is easily made, but its taste depends upon yours. Granville Calhoun, famous bear hunter of Hazel Creek, once informed me that coffee wasn't coffee until it could float an iron wedge. He ain't far wrong at that! Some advocate a tablespoon to the cup and one for the pot. Frankly, I like to fill a lard bucket about two-thirds full of water, bring it nearly to a boil and then put in a handful or so. This may sound hit or miss, but I have never missed yet.

Here is something else that will stick to your ribs. Toast one slice of bread. This can be done by impaling the slice on a stick and holding it near the fire. Slather the toast with butter and, on this, place a slice or so of tomato. To this add a fried egg, said egg with the sunny side up and the edges a bit brown so they'll be crisp. If possible, have a dash of Worcestershire sauce on the egg before it is fried. An egg cooked in this manner has 'personality,' as Judge Don Phillips says. Place the egg on the toast and tomato and sprinkle with grated cheese. Of course salt and pepper may be added to suit the individual. I'll venture to say you try this at home.

"An easy appetizing meal for hungry hunters is stew. Use two cans of vegetable soup, a two-thirds cup of water, a large onion, chopped fine and a can of beef. Let this simmer for 15 minutes and just before adding add a hunk of butter about the size of a walnut. This can be served on toast or plain bread; pot biscuits, though, improve the concoction 50 per cent. "Another variety of stew which is sustaining, as well as filling, may be prepared thusly: Two pounds of ground steak browned, chop about a quart of cabbage, dice three large potatoes, and as many crying Bermudas as your conscience will allow, add two or three carrots, one small turnip diced, one-quarter pound diced salt pork (side meat), two cans tomatoes, celery, if you have some, salt, pepper and large chunk of butter. Don't quite cover this with water. Then let the concoction simmer about an hour. I am still using the frying pan and bucket.

"I am a great advocate of fresh vegetables in camp. Once on a bear hunting trip to Swan Meadows in Graham county, I took as extras, and incidentally had to pack them myself, two heads of lettuce, one of cabbage, and, of all things, a jar of mayonnaise. There was considerable comment among the supposed hard boiled members until I came forth with an onion and lettuce sandwich. Believe it or not, my two heads of lettuce were eaten in very short order, and the "boiled" cabbage was used as dessert for subsequent meals.

"I usually contrive to have a can or so of salmon along since an episode of several years ago. A party of about 15 of us left Bryson City for Swan Meadows and intended going by way of Tellico Plains, Tenn., and up the North river, so that we could reach the meadows without much walking. When we got to Tellico Plains we found that the road was closed, and as some of the party had gone by way of Robbinsville, we had to go as far as possible up Tellico river, and walk about 15 miles out the state line. That was some hike. The only redeeming feature being lunch composed of bread and salmon. I don't believe I have ever tasted anything better. That is, with possible one exception, and that was on a bear hunt on Deep Creek above Bryson City. Back (Baxter) Laney and I followed a chase up the fork ridge of Deep creek nearly to the top of the mountain. The bear finally ran from us, and at lunch time the can of pork and beans I thought I had, turned out to be tomato soup.

"I have many recipes in the back of my head, including the one I sent you last year of quail fried with pineapple, and a new one for 'Hush Puppies,' that I'd like to try on you.

"I'd like to tell you about the time Mark Cathey and I slept three nights on a pile of potatoes at Hall's cabin on top of the Smokies, and how on another trip there, 54 men made a meal of one pheasant and the gravy, and how someone (page Paul Angel, of Bryson City) swapped Mark's and Fons Holfield's store teeth one night, and Mark came out the next morning whittling on a set saying his 'dam teeth had shrunk.' "With kindest regards, I am, "Sincerely yours,"

Signed
T. D. BRYSON, JR.

Secretary Makes Report On C. Of C. Work

At the annual meeting of the Franklin Chamber of Commerce held recently the following report was given by Lee Guffey, secretary:

The Information Booth was open six hours per day, from May 15 to October 1. During this time 258 requests were answered, 175 letters and 781 pieces of literature mailed.

There were 747 visitors at the Information Booth for various forms of information during its operation, to which 2,200 folders were distributed (of which about one-third were U. S. National Forest Service folders).

A number of inquiries were received and answered concerning different minerals in this section, some from home seekers, others wished to buy products grown or made in this county.

The Chamber of Commerce also cooperated with the Jackson county Chamber of Commerce and other counties in this part of the state in their effort to have the Mountain Test Farm, near Swannona, relocated on the site adjoining Western Carolina Teachers College at Cullowhee.

Slagle's Guernseys Again Make Record

Two daughters of the registered Guernsey sire, Wanda's Sentry of Garden Creek, owned by A. B. Slagle, Franklin, N. C., have just completed official records above the average for the Guernsey breed. They are Kate of Belmont View producing 12000.1 pounds of milk and 512.5 pounds of butter fat in class DD, and Fairlady of Belmont View who produced 11098.9 pounds of milk and 531.1 pounds of butter fat in class CC. They are owned and were tested by A. B. Slagle. This outstanding purebred sire now has ten sons and daughters listed in the Performance Register of Guernsey cattle with full information on their breeding and performance.
