Sawmill Workers Must Get New Exemptions

The temporary exemptions given a large number of Western North Carolina Sawmills last spring when the 48-hour workweek was ordered for the entire timber industry have expired, and the operators must either obtain new exemptions or go on the longer work week, it was announced yesterday by Robert B. Justice, area war manpower director.

Many sawmills in this area explained at the time, Mr. Justice said, that they were unable to get sufficient logs out of the woods to keep their mills operating 48 hours a week, and therefore were temporarily exempted from the order.

Under the regulations, the U. S. Employment Service will give statements of availability to employees of mills that fail to comply with the order unless they again obtain exemption, it was stated.

Application for exemption should be filed with the local office of the United States Employment Service.
