Babblin' About

Youth Center Gimmick

J. P. Brady

Ignatius O'Toole leveled a bony finger on a line with my ample nose and observed, somewhat unkindly:

"You're a nincompoop."

A remark of this nature is not unusual from Ignatius, who through it all stands as my favorite leprechaun and counselor on a wide variety of subjects.

Nevertheless, I objected to being called a nincompoop:

"Why," I demanded to know, "did you call me that, you little green runt?"

Iggy shifted his weight to his other foot.

"You're a nincompoop for several reasons, but right now for overlooking a very obvious way to build this Youth Center everyone in town is wringing their hands over."

"And how is that?" I asked sarcastically.

"Just this," Iggy explained. "Have you characters completely forgotten how they did things in the old days? Back then it was an all-out effort to survive. By jingoes they got the job done TOGETHER."

That's the key to this whole Youth Center idea — TOGETHER."

I settled back to listen. Iggy balanced precariously on the edge of my typewriter and then continued:

"Every successful idea must have a gimmick; that is, something that bands folks together. This Youth Center idea is bogging down because they've failed to come up with a gimmick."

"And I suppose you have one?" I asked.

"You're durned tootin' I have!"

"May I be so bold as to ask what it is?"

Iggy looked me up and down with a glare of tolerant contempt.

"You're just a nincompoop," he said for the third time. "This gimmick is right in front of you and you don't see it. Think now . . . just the other day that plumber fellow, H. G. Welch, was talking with you. Remember? Good! And he told you he would be willing to donate his labor FREE to install the plumbing if they decided to put up the center. Well?"

The light began to dawn.

"You mean . . ." I asked.

"Exactly," Iggy answered.

"That's a terrific gimmick, pal . . . something like an old timey house raising where everyone in town donates something . . . labor, materials, advice . . . that's a real idea!"

"Now you're catching on," Iggy observed. "You're a nincompoop, but you're catching on."

"I understand A. B. Slagle is donating land for the Youth Center, so that means two people have offered their services." I mused to myself. "And if some others would chip in and give labor and materials the Youth Center could be built for about half the estimated cost."

"A sterling deduction, pal."

"Of course, the students themselves should volunteer to carry a lot of the labor load, since it is going to be their center. Iggy, you're a brainy little cuss."

He blushed a bright green (as leprechauns are prone to do). "Ah, you're just saying that because it's true."

MOVIE STAR MATERIAL FOR THE VERY ASKING

Looks like the West Coast genius, Walt Disney, is coming here (Ga. and N. C.) to film the story of a Civil War train chase between the Blue and the Grey.

As I understand the set-up, the Tallulah Falls Railway is just right for the part the railroad must play in the picture.

And I might add I am delighted they have finally found something useful for the old TF to do. The railroad's history has been one of more downs than ups, and I doubt if any other single utility in the area has suffered more abuse than the TF. They've always grumbled about the service it offers and, for want of nothing better to complain about, there are those who condemn the railroad because they must cross "the bumpy tracks."

Now, this once regal lady of a by-gone era is prepared to bring a small measure of fame to this locale through the magic of the motion pictures.

The old girl was picked for this particular movie because her tracks are unique and the terrain along side is not marred by modern-day buildings and billboards.

Those wooden trestles folks have criticized and laughed about are perfectly in tune with the 1860's, the period of the movie.

My hat's off to the Tallulah Falls. She's repaying those unkind remarks by giving a real boost to her area.

This column is betting the Tallulah Falls movie is going to be just one of several to be filmed around here, now that the TF, with her unique tracks and wooden trestles, has caught the fancy of Hollywood.
