Gotta Sweet Tooth? This Is Honey Year

If you've got a sweet tooth, this is a good year to buy some honey.

W. A. Stephen, N. C. State College extension beekeeper, says that honey production in most parts of North Carolina is good this year, and the honey is of excellent quality.

Here are a few tips from Mr. Stephen.

Most honey is packed with a "balloon" in the top of the jar. When the jar is inverted the balloon will rise. If the balloon rises rapidly, the honey may be either thin or hot or both, but when the balloon rises very slowly in hot weather, and you've really got something.

Mr. Stephen explains that this is the result of low moisture content. Since much of the honey has been stored during the month of May when the weather was dry, it was no trick for the bees to remove moisture from the nectar as they made it over into honey.

"Consequently, most honey has good quality and is of heavy body this year," he concludes.

Many small flue-cured tobacco growers in North Carolina are trying out aromatic tobacco production this year in an attempt to take up the slack of sagging farm income.
