Methodists Meet To Talk Program Plans

Representatives of the six Methodist churches in Macon County surveyed plans for cooperative work in the churches of the area at a meeting at First Methodist Church in Franklin on Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. B. L. Sherrill, chairman of the advisory committee which supervises this program, presided. This program is sponsored in the county by Methodist Men groups of the churches.

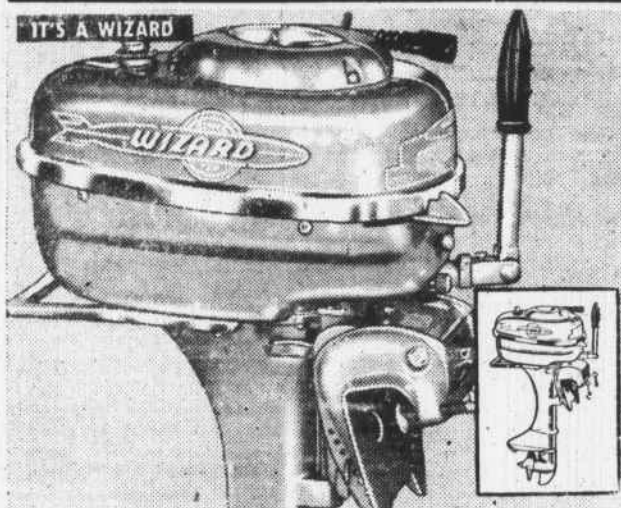

The Methodist rural program, which took four years to inaugurate, began in the fall of 1955 when the Woman's Division of Christian Service assigned Miss Margaret Wilson for general organizational and teaching work in the 21 churches of the area.

This program has involved a variety of activities over these three years, including work in vacation church schools throughout the county, work within the Methodist Youth Fellowship program, organizational problems of the Woman's Society of Christian Service in individual churches, assistance with choirs, teacher training, and other work. In addition, the program has sought to relate the local Methodist churches of the county with the larger interests and activities of national and world Methodism.

Miss Wilson suggested that during the next year she be allowed to concentrate her activities in the field of teacher training and the demonstration of resources and techniques in the church school classes.

Permanent pastures and alfalfa are long-lived crops and therefore do not have to be sown each year.
