

CAN YOU HELP? Western Carolina Seeking Items For History Display

Cullowhee Western Carolina College is seeking to establish a permanent display depicting the history of the college, according to plans announced here this week.

W. E. Bird, president-emeritus and college historian, and Mrs. Lillian Buchanan, librarian, issued an appeal to all alumni asking them to loan or donate any mementoes in their possession having to do with the earlier days of the college.

Mr. Bird, who was dean, acting president and president, said that in many instances survivors of deceased alumni found little or no interest in items that might prove invaluable to the college, and discarded them as useless. Actually, these are the things the college is looking for — old newspapers, yearbooks, letters, commencement programs, textbooks, and anything else that might represent some phase of school life.

Mrs. Buchanan said that 75 feet of display space along the gallery corridor in Hunter Library will be used to show these mementoes. The display cases are enclosed with glass, and may be locked to preclude the danger of any damage to the items. She said that placards will be arranged to show the name and address of each donor, and will note whether the item was loaned or donated.

Alumni living within the area covered by this newspaper are urged to contact either Mrs. Buchanan or Mr. Bird if they wish to participate in this effort.

THEY'RE ALWAYS AROUND THE CHECKER BOARD

Seasons don't change things around the checker board in Franklin. When winter arrives, the players just move it inside J. B. Pendergrass' store on Main Street and the games continue. The arrival of the board on the sidewalk each spring is considered a better sign that warm weather has arrived than the appearance of a robin.

Amount Of Fertilizer Used Will Determine How Good Your Pastures Will Become

Many North Carolina farmers, including Maconians, will seed alfalfa and pastures in the next several weeks.

But how many of the pastures and alfalfa fields will have a good stand?

According to W. W. Woodhouse Jr., soil scientist for the N. C. Agricultural Experiment Station, that depends partly on the amount of fertilizer used.

North Carolina does not have any natural grassland soils. Therefore, Tar Heel farmers must change the soils they have into land that will grow nutritious pasture and forage plants. The principal tools for doing this are fertilizer and lime.

"Fertilizer helps in getting a good stand of alfalfa and pasture grasses," Mr. Woodhouse said, "and the better start we give a sod, the longer it's likely to hold up and the better it's likely to yield in later years. Fertilizer applied at planting can carry through for over five years."

There is no substitute for a soil test to find out how much fertilizer should be used on a given field.

However, for the farmers who have waited too long for the test, Mr. Woodhouse suggests they fall back on a general rule of thumb for applying fertilizer.

"The 2-12-12 fertilizer is standard for most situations," Mr. Woodhouse said. "For pasture 2-12-12 with borax. For pasture mixtures borax doesn't matter."

As for rates, Mr. Woodhouse suggests using 600-800 pounds of mixtures borax doesn't matter."

tures. On alfalfa use 800-1000 pounds of the same mixture. Getting the fertilizer spread in the right place is another job that requires some attention.

"The fertilizer should be placed where the young seedlings can reach it soon after germination," Mr. Woodhouse said. "The so-called band seeding makes this possible by placing the seed slightly above or to one side of the fertilizer."

If a farmer's drill is not equipped to do this, he suggests he drill the fertilizer separately, or broadcast and disc lightly.

"Whatever method you use," Mr. Woodhouse cautioned, "spread the fertilizer evenly over the field."

State College Answers Timely Farm Questions

Q. How are corn prices this fall expected to compare with those of a year ago?

A. Prices for this harvest season are expected to be generally lower. The near-record 78 million bushels of corn produced for North Carolina will be responsible for the lower prices. Marketing specialists say facilities for storing the large crop are inadequate.

Q. What changes are expected in the hog market as prices dip?

A. Greater emphasis will be placed on the grade and weight of hogs coming to market. The better hogs will reflect a clearer price differential.

Q. I would like to harvest some of my 1958 corn crop early. How can I determine its value?

A. Take a representative sample of the corn. Shell it. Place the shelled corn in a moisture-proof bag or jar and take it to your local county agent or ASC office, so a moisture test can be run.

After the moisture percentage has been determined, apply the following average discount rate: four cents per bushel for each 1 per cent of moisture above 20 per cent; three cents per bushel for each 1 per cent moisture above 15 but less than 20 per cent.

Deduct this moisture discount, plus local shelling charges, from the market price to determine what your corn is worth.

Farm fire hazards increase during the fall and winter months.

Chemically treat small grain seed before planting.

Proper grading of tobacco is important to marketing.
