Teague's Silage, Covered By Polyethylene Material

COULD MEAN SAVINGS — Teague Is Experimenting With New Silage Storage

By T. H. FAGG (County Agent)

Dairy farmers in Macon County are continually seeking ways of producing cheap feed for their cows.

They have found that silage is one of their cheapest sources, and they are feeding increasing amounts each year. One of the problems in feeding silage is the cost of storage space. Our farmers have, and are using, upright silos constructed of concrete and others constructed of brick, also concrete stave silos put out by commercial companies. Temporary silos constructed of woven wire and sisal-kraft paper are used to quite an extent. Many farmers use trench silos, which are trenches dug into the side of a hill, and they are usually poured walls or block walls. This is perhaps one of the cheapest permanent silos in use at present. One bunker type silo, which is constructed of treated posts and timbers, is now under construction in the county. This type silo has proven very practical throughout other sections of the state.

Recently much work has been done by various colleges and experiments stations seeking ways of storing silage more cheaply. One of these ways is stacking silage on top of the ground. This has been done very successfully in a number of places in the U. S. An experiment of this type may be seen on the farm of Woodrow Teague, in the Prentiss Community. Mr. Teague chopped his corn in the conventional way and spread it in a long row on top of the ground. He kept a tractor running on top of the pile all the time to pack the silage tightly to prevent air from getting in and spoiling the feed. This pile of silage is approximately 20 feet wide, 60 feet long, 6 feet high, and contains 126 tons of silage. After piling the silage, Mr. Teague covered the entire stack with a polyethylene cover. This cover is an air-tight material which prevents air and rain from getting in and damaging the silage. This experiment is being watched with much interest, as it is one of the first of its kind to be used in the state, and if successful could mean a great saving in storage costs in producing silage to our dairy and beef producers in Western North Carolina.

Feeder Calf Market Best Since 1951

North Carolina feeder calf producers are enjoying the best market year since 1951, according to Guy Cassell, livestock marketing specialist for the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service.

Figures from the first two feeder calf sales this fall indicate that prices will be well above those of last year and may top those of 1952, one of the best years in recent history. The Rocky Mount sale September 18 averaged close to $30 per hundred pounds, up from the $21.6 average of the year before. Approximately 1,400 animals were sold.

At Goldsboro September 19, the 507 animals sold averaged $28.38 per hundred, up from the $21.45 average of last year.

Mr. Cassell explained the difference in price of about $1.62 between the Rocky Mount and Goldsboro sales by pointing to the much larger number sold at the Rocky Mount event. The Rocky Mount animals went to buyers from Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and North Carolina.

The Goldsboro animals went mostly to North Carolina buyers. The out-of-state buyers couldn't get a truck load, explained Mr. Cassell.

The marketing specialist pointed out that North Carolina farmers are doing a better job with their animals. At Goldsboro there were 47 choice, 157 good, 82 medium steers; there were also three fancy, 43 choice, 102 good, and 73 medium heifers.
