BRIEFS

Good morning!

Do everything for Vass.

Deal with our home merchants.

Don't forget the building association.

Are you helping the Armenian children?

The Pilot will shortly appear in a new suit.

Advertising is the greatest business in the world.

It might be worse. You can still get a passport to heaven without showing your income tax receipt.

The Federal Reserve Board is respectfully informed that deflation is complete when the car begins to run on the rim.

From what we have observed, there are more headaches in a bottle of hook than formerly were contained in a whole barrel of booze.

The Pilot man once heard a girl say she had acquired calloused feet from wearing shoes that were too large for her, but we never saw the shoes.

The parlor is filled when an engaged girl and her victim take possession of it.

And so the immigrants have an average of $85. Not to mention 17 deceases.

Commodity prices have fallen according to Bradstreet's. But Gunter's grocery store doesn't seem to handle this line.

A New Jersey man is spending a year in jail rather than return to his wife. He probably figures that he will get some time off for good behavior which would not be the case at home.

A headline says Dorothy Dalton has lost part of her wardrobe. Well, well! The Pilot man has seen Dorothy in a couple of plays fixed up in a way that led to the conclusion she never had a wardrobe.

If the Pilot man's pay is slim and he can't get into the new office safe, what would Judge Landis advise him to do!

These short skirts have robbed many an ankle, formerly considered pretty, of its illusions.

In these days whenever a man is told what to take for a cold his snappy comeback is "where can I get it."

Seven districts out of seventeen in Allegheny county, Maryland, have voted dry for twenty years recently back-fired and when the ballots were all counted had declared themselves overwhelmingly wet. This may mean something in the abstract but the concrete results will not prove of sufficient importance to warrant getting excited over the situation.

Prohibition may be a dead issue, as Mr. Bryan says, but it seems to be costing an awful lot to bury it.

Answering the paragrapher who asks "what has become of the old-fashioned man who used to advise his son to get married," we respectfully submit that he is now supporting his grandson in a kick against his father of sixty-five who wants to wed a chicken of twenty-three.

About all a romantic girl has left these days is to marry a man in order to cure him of the craving for the liquor habit.

It strikes us that wild oats have come in for a lot of odium that ought to be attached to rye and corn.

It has about gotten so in the cities that the taxicab men will rob you if you ride and the holdup men will rob you if you walk.

Speaking of bootleg whisky, one swallow doesn't make a spring but it frequently sends a man to a warmer climate.

The trouble with the man with the hoe is he is apt to lay it down for the lure of the city where he can see the hose.

A minister may become unpopular, but short sermons have never been the cause of it.

We'll bet the Pilgrims, who made a law against kissing their wives on Sunday, didn't make one against fussing with them on Sunday.

One hears less of the I Wont Work Club these days, which, somehow or other doesn't tend to allay the Pilot man's suspicions.

Rev. L. H. Joyner, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, this town, will preach next Sunday morning and evening. You are expected to be there.

Miss Fannie Gunter was taken suddenly ill last week and for a time her life was despaired of, but her guardian, Grandpap Gunter was very attentive to her wants. He sent for the doctor, but he being out of town Grandpap administered several doses of spirits of nitre, which reduced her fever and when she retired on Thursday night her condition was somewhat improved. In fact so much that the next morning when Grandpap Gunter went to her apartment he was surprised to find quite full of life. Her muleship had improved so much that she would have kicked the slats out of any person that came within reach of her hind hoofs. Fannie has been in the Gunter family for nearly thirty years, and no better mule ever trotted up the railroad track than she. Grandpap Gunter, of course, is the happiest man in town because of her complete recovery.

Card of Thanks

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Thompson wish to express their many thanks to the people of this community for their valuable assistance rendered them when their home was destroyed by fire on the eighteenth instant. We not only appreciate the kindness of the people, but the motive that prompted it.
