THE WONDER AND THE WISH

By Helen Mar D'Auby

Said John to Bess, as they walked out,
One day in springtime, early,
"I'd like to know just all about
These little lichens, curly;
And just where all these green things stay
To be so mighty ready,
The minute snow has gone away,
To grow up strong and steady."

Just see those pussy-willows bright,
And green, and soft and furry,
I wonder if they slept last night,
They seem in such a hurry
To get ahead of everything
In spite of wintery weather,
And hear those robins, how they sing,
So glad to get together.

And chat about the summer time,
And plan about the making,
Of nests where cats and boys can't climb;
It's quite an undertaking.
And I don't wonder they should meet
To talk the matter over,
But where they sleep and what they eat,
With not a leaf of clover.

Or bit of fruit or any grain,
To me, it's queer and funny,
I'd wait for softer winds and rain,
With weather warm and sunny."
"Why John," laughed little Bessie then,
"How very queer you're talking;
Why don't you fly, now, surely when
You should, instead of walking.

Those robins, up there, in the sun
Us two, are closely eying,
And wondering why we walk or run,
Instead of gaily flying.
And pussy-willow pities us,
Our feet all dressed in leather,
And heads all wrapped, with such a fuss
About a little weather."

Dark red, and green and yellow,
Are laughing at us, hear their sweet
Low gurgle, soft and mellow.
They like to wet their shiny throats
And let the water dimple
Against their pretty satin coats,
And think us very simple.

It's just like this, I do suppose,
With birds, and trees and flowers,
Their lives and thoughts nobody knows,
Much more than they know ours.
But how I wish we really might Make them feel half so bonny,
When springtime comes so glad and bright,
As they make us feel, Johnny."
