The best New Year resolution for the North Carolina farmer this year is one pledging himself to produce his own food and feed crops.

Faith without works is worth little, so are pledges without action. The business-like farmer will begin now to plan his crop acreages for the coming season.

Tom Tarheel says the best wife-saver is not some highly advertised bottle concoction but is running water in the home.

The well prepared hotbed makes early gardening easy.

More cotton on fewer acres and the remaining acres put to food and feed crops and livestock is the wise plan that will be followed by some Tarheel farmers this year.

A difference of over 1,000 pounds of legume hay per acre was secured where land was limed as compared with a similar unlimed acrea in tests made by North Carolina farmers last season.

Five demonstrations with soybeans showed a yield of 4,606 pounds of hay per acre where one ton of lime was used on the land as compared with 3,822 pounds of hay per acre where no lime was used.

The farm population of North Carolina in 1925 was 1,446,881 persons. Of this number 937,001 were white people.

There were 283,482 farms in North Carolina in 1925 and 24,983 of these farms were mortgaged. The amount of the mortgages was only 36.4 percent of the value, however.

Tom Tarheel says he is going to sell all his extra garden produce, his milk and butter and his fresh eggs on the curb market this year.

Nine hundred and eighty-one hogs sold by farmers of Perquimans county last year brought a net profit of $4,296.78.
