Reading in Friday's News and Observer of the death of Capt. Alf. H. Toler in Texas, recalled some faint recollections of the Civil War. Capt. Toler, a native of Fayetteville, N. C., moved to Texas after the war was over. He married Addie McNeill, daughter of Malcom Paul McNeill, a rich planter of the Deep River section above Carthage. McNeill married a Miss Alston, daughter of another rich planter on Deep River. She died early in life. Addie was their only child; and at the closing scenes and troublous times of the war, her mother being dead, she visited among her relatives. Duncan Morrison then lived at Johnsonville. His wife was a near relative of Addie McNeill. It was at their home that Addie and Captain Toler were married.

I am indebted to the late Neill W. Cameron for an account of their marriage that took place at high noon. A grand wedding dinner had been prepared. The marriage rites were over, the wedding party were proceeding to the wedding feast, when looking out of the window they saw quite a number of Yankees mounted on their horses. They were trying to capture Captain Toler, to take him a prisoner. So he and the other men had to shedaddle. He didn't get a mouthful of the dinner, nor have the time to kiss his bride good bye. The Yankees came in, ate up all the dinner, ate like hogs and dogs. When they emptied a dish they threw it on the floor. If it did not break they kicked it. After they had eaten up all the dinner they told the ladies how much they enjoyed the wedding feast. But they did not get Captain Toler. Mr. Cameron said that he and some other men kept him in hiding and carried his meals to him, and that no Yank could ever have found the place where he was hidden. Somewhere in that picturesque wooded country around Cameron Hill. Mr. Cameron used some words not in the Sunday school lessons when he told about the Yankees eating up all the wedding dinner. Such are the fortunes and misfortunes of war.

Two SPECIALS AT THE CAROLINA THEATRE.

The next two attractions at the Carolina Theatre, Southern Pines, are two of Paramount's new specials and both are worthy of the name. Saturday night, the incomparable Pola Negri, "Empress of Emotions," appears in "Barbed Wire," written by Hall Caine, author of "The Chris-tion," and "The Woman Thou Gavest Me."

It is the story of a patriotic French girl who finds herself in love with a man who represents all she believes she hates—her country's prisoner of war. The story is laid between August, 1914, and November, 1918, and contains all of the action, all of the drama, all of the laughs and tears of these four eventful years, it being the first picture to cover the entire period of the war. It is not only a thrilling love melodrama, but a thundering indictment of war and a mighty plea for international brotherhood.

The most remarkable picture of all time, under the title of "Chang" comes to the Carolina Theatre Tuesday night. "Chang" undoubtedly belongs in the category of great pictures. Nothing in the cinema line to date can beat this film for novelty, sustained interest and exciting incident. It is a picture that will delight children and adults alike. The New York World calls it "one of the finest pictures ever made." It played nine weeks at the Rivoli Theatre, New York. It is in its fourth week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, and in its third week at Detroit. Nothing like it has ever been seen on the screen and to miss it is to miss one of the year's sensations.
