

The Week in Southern Pines

SOUTHERN PINES CHILDREN HAVE GAY HALLOWE'EN

The Moore mansion on Massachusetts Avenue, Southern Pines, was the scene Tuesday night of a children's Halloween party in which the gayety of the occasion was rivaled only by its gay setting.

Dorothy Moore laid out a number of rooms in the Halloween colors and the tables were massed with the fruit of the season, the traditional bounty of the harvest. All kinds of light drinks in their var-colored bottles glistened in the eerie light while the children put all the zest of their fun into the scene.

A parade throughout the first floor won the applause of the few attending grownups and in the costume contest Helena Kelley, as a little Chinese girl, and Donna Breadback as a clown won first and second prizes, respectively, for the girls, while Billy Mudgett as a pirate and Arthur Tracy as a delightful little devil won first and second prizes for the boys.

The judges of the contest were Mrs. Ed Ashe, Mrs. Bob Everett, Mrs. Perkinson, and Mrs. Roy Pushee.

The costumes ranged over all the traditional Halloween figures and included a number of original characters which ingenious Southern Pines parents had conjured up for the Moore party.

The party which had its series of Halloween tales, contests, witchcraft and the like included Budgie Leavitt, Tom Morris, George Pette, Ralph Chandler, Bill Mudgett, Tom Atkinson, Clem Wrenn, Arthur Tracy, Arthur Lyons, Robert Crandell, Roy York, Bob Able, John Pottle, George Moore, Charles Everest, Tom Miller, Lincoln Nott, Ruth Travis; Nellie Leavitt, Mary Welch, Helena Kelley, Elenore Moore, Katherine Buchan, Edith Poate, Isabel Chatfield, Margaret Ashe, Susan Swett, Ruth Travis, Juliet Vale, Alice Able, Donna Breadback, Dorothy Moore, Tootie Everett, Davie Moore, Virginia Beasley.

Wanted—New Tractor For Southern Pines

The Old One Finds it's no Match for Seaboard Train in Brief Encounter.

When an irresistible force meets an immovable body, what happens?

It's one of those problems that's been troubling us for years. We have never known the answer. We have often run up against an immovable body—we once tried to get into a World's Series ball game without a ticket, for instance—and we know exactly what happens in such instances. But we have never really considered ourselves an irresistible force.

To us, therefore, it was an interesting experiment which a certain colored employe of the Town of Southern Pines tried out last Monday. He was piloting the village tractor, a vehicle of considerable girth and avordupois when kept in its own class, and he was headed for the Seaboard tracks when the two were last seen together. Now it is a simple matter in arithmetic, algebra, calculus or what have you to figure out that a tractor is not in the same class as a Seaboard train. They really aren't any match at all. A Seaboard train never could make the weight to fight in the same classification.

Only One Blow Struck.

But obviously to those who witnessed the encounter, the driver of Southern Pines' late lamented tractor did not appreciate the disparity. The train kept on, and he kept on. The train was not, you will argue, an immovable body. True, horizontally; but oh, laterally! And our tractor chauffeur certainly must have considered himself an irresistible force, or he would never have tackled the monster. Briefly, they met. Very briefly. The referee, had there been one, never could have counted ten. The tractor was just OUT on the first blow. Seaboard landed one punch and Tractor went spinning. Dr. Mudgett was called but he could do nothing. For funeral services, see morning papers. Please omit flowers.

Oh yes, the driver escaped unharmed.

But we understand the Seaboard suffered one fractured cowcatcher.
