MOUNTAIN ICE COMPANY TAPS BIG DEEP WELL

Plenty of Water Found Under 500 Feet of Hardest Granite.

FAR BELOW SEA LEVEL.

When the Mountain Ice Company commenced the construction of its big ice plant at Aberdeen it did several things that are of great benefit to the community. The first was to distribute the large sum of money involved in paying the big army of hands engaged all summer, which money scattered throughout the business world of the community. The second was the establishment of a big concern in the Sandhills to care for Sandhills needs, and the third was the proving of a fine supply of underground water below the hard rock that is the basement floor of the Aberdeen basin.

To make ice takes water, and to make ice on the scale practiced now at Aberdeen takes a lot of water. To make good ice calls for good water. In these days of close scrutiny of everything that is used for human consumption good ice is as essential as good water. So the ice company decided to drill a deep well to procure a supply from far down in the rocks. Past experience argued against the likelihood of a satisfactory supply in the basin, but Dowdy & Butler, who have drilled many deep wells in this part of the State, were called in, and they undertook to sink an eight inch hole that would find water. Last Saturday they pumped off the head in the hole which is 545 feet deep and they could not lower the supply in the hole when taking out 40 gallons a minute. But it was no easy job, and at times the question arose as to whether the task was likely to win a reward for the hard work. For when the drill got down less than 100 feet it ran into granite, and it stayed there almost all the rest of the way. Drilling an eight-inch hole in solid granite rock over 400 feet is a slow process, and for several months the 2,500 pound string of tools has been bobbing up and down, pounding its way slowly through the hard rock, until it tapped a softer seam of micaceous schists, and water came in in sufficient volume to flow over the top of the casing at the surface of the ground.

On two or three occasions the tools were lost in the well. To fish out half a ton of heavy steel from the bottom of a 400 feet hole, or deeper, as was necessary in the last case, is no job to be desired. But it was done. And finally the water was found. It is important to know that even if the way to get water is to go down through 500 feet of granite it can be found there under the Aberdeen basin, and of a quality that is extremely soft, free from mineral impurities, clear, cool, and of the highest type for ice making, for any domestic need, and for any kind of manufacturing that needs water in such quantities as deep wells can supply. The Mountain Ice Company have definitely decided that under Aberdeen is plenty of the best type of water, and although it is hard to reach it is of the right kind and quantity when it is obtained.

The bottom of the deep well at Aberdeen is 205 feet below the level of the sea. While the well at Pinehurst some years ago, which found water at 730 feet, is a deeper well than that at Aberdeen the Aberdeen well goes farther below sea level, as Pinehurst is 650 feet above the sea and Aberdeen at the ice plant only 339. This shows that even at the depth of over 200 feet below sea level the water is still fresh and of high quality. This is also borne out at the mines of the Carolina Coal Company at Coal Glen, where the workings are now fully 400 feet below sea level, and are the biggest opening probably in the State so far below sea level. The Mountain Ice Company has settled the question of deep water at Aberdeen, and Dowdy & Butler have shown that heavy equipment, ingenuity and persistence can get the water, no matter how hard or thick the covering over it.

New Road to Southern Pines Country Club

Offers Outlet to Much New Territory as Well as the Old Settlements.

Another pronounced indication of the eastward movement of development in the Weymouth section of Southern Pines is the plan to widen and grade the Indiana avenue extension from Highland avenue, just below the Highland Pines Inn, to the junction with one of the roads leading into the Country Club property out near the Grover place. That is one of the oldest roads of the neighborhood, and has been an inlet of more or less prominence since the days of turpentine and lumber out that way. Then it was appropriated by the railroad that was surveyed out to the Coast Line thirty years ago, and when the railroad fell down it became a country road for keeps. It has been widened in some places, but from Highland road it is still narrow in most places.

Southern Pines, Weymouth and the Country Club will join in making a big broad and substantial road, as it will be the main entry to a large area in the Country Club building section, and it will also open in better manner a bunch of the fine building sites that Weymouth has in that vicinity. It will be the chief inlet to the area where Robinson is establishing his country place, and one of the main roads to the whole neighborhood at the head of James Creek, which is likely to undertake some development before very long. The road will also provide a further route to the lands in the Fort Bragg boundary now reached by the old Raeford road exclusively.

The expectation of those who seem to know best is that the improvement of this road will be followed by the sale of many building sites and a number of new homes out in that quarter.

Tobacco Prices Higher Than Ever at Aberdeen Market

Friday, the closing day of the market last week, saw over 175,000 pounds of Leaf sold at Saunderson's Warehouse.

Large Quantities of the Product sold above $40 a hundred and some of it reached $75 a hundred.

Farmers say they are getting the best returns of any season since the World War, and that they get better figures at Aberdeen than anywhere else they have tried out tobacco.

Tobacco is coming in now from a wider area, and never was so much sold at Aberdeen as this fall.

If you want all the money your leaf is worth bring it to Aberdeen, where the prices top the market, and good tobacco is recognized and paid for at its real value.
