Old Bethesda

By BION H. BUTLER

A narrative of the settlement of the Sandhills and a character sketch of the old Scots who built this community and were so prominent in creating the nation.

A book you can read with pleasure and take home with you when you go, to carry with you some reminiscences of this interesting region.

A volume you should have in your library here as a part of the story of the unfolding of the Sandhills.

Miss Florence Kane, of Kushequa, Pa., a frequent winter visitor to Southern Pines, writes of Old Bethesda:

"I never in all my life saw a book with as much meat in it served up in such delectable fashion."

On Sale in Southern Pines and Pinehurst, and by Mrs. Mable Bethune in Aberdeen.

Former Local Editor Comes To Town After 50 Years Absence

A. J. Tefft Was Station Agent,
Telegrapher and Newspaper
Man Here in 80's

By Charles Macauley

A full half century has passed since John T. Patrick planned a little town in the pinelands and sandhills of North Carolina, and he and nearly all of his contemporaries have passed on, yet now and then reappears one of the few survivors of the long gone days when we were not quite important enough to invite future Presidents and real Governors to stop awhile.

So, quite casually, as is the habit with all the craft, A. Jay Tefft, once in the days of long ago Southern Pines' only station agent, telegrapher and newspaperman, dropped into the office for a brief visit. Veritably a "first settler" he is revisiting the once embryo settlement, Patrick's pride and now famous Mid-South Resort, to find paved streets replacing the sandy trails of yore, and hotels, stores, churches, bungalows, cottages and mansions wide spread over the former deer forests, blackjack wastes, sand dunes and pines. Where once arbutus and pyxie moss shone in the tangled pine needles now blossoms handsome shrubbery and beautiful flowers.

Following the removal of Frank P. Woodward and the death of the "Southern Colonist," Patrick's advertising sheet, and the arrival of Mr. Tefft in August, 1885 to act as station agent for the Seaboard P. A. Goodridge broached the idea of another paper, and with his capital Tefft went on to Baltimore and purchased a small printing plant which was set up in a shack located about in the rear of the present Mills residence on West Broad street. Here the "Pine Knot," the town's second venture in journalism, was started with Mr. Goodridge as editor and Mr. Tefft as pressman, assistant editor and advertising manager. This sheet, a paper of eight pages, four columns to a page bore the caption "Lighted for the Illumination of Tar Heels Both Native and Adopted." It continued publication for four years.

Population: Forty

When Mr. Tefft arrived he found a population of about forty souls, the first northern settlers John A. Barnes and wife living in the block now northwest of Bennett street and Vermont avenue; Philander Pond Patrick's right hand man, building the house on Bennett street, now Viall's, to be distinguished then and for many years as the only painted house in town; W. A. Bland running the little saw mill on the pond, now Piney Woods, and living in a small house now a part of C. T. Patch's residence. During Mr. Tefft's stay of a little over a year S. T. Moffett built "Tara Nook" on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Bennett street. L. A. Young Mrs. Ruggie's father's house, now a part of the Woodworth, and W. R. Raymond the Prospect House on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Page street. This structure was long since destroyed by fire, while Captain A. M. Clark's house at Pennsylvania and Bennett and Harry Parker's next to the Woodworth still survive.

With all other settlers of that day, Mr. Tefft, when in need of supplies, either walked or hired Squire Shaw's team for the trip to Manly, the Sandhills metropolis where they also found a church service. With the experience gained here Mr. Tefft became a real editor, publishing the "Echo" of Port Jefferson, L. I., for 25 years, finally retiring to his home town of Albany, N. Y., from whence he and his daughter Martha broke their journey to Florida long enough to once more view the old town so new in its present beautiful setting.

ABERDEEN GIRL PLAYS ON FLORA MACDONALD PROGRAM

On Monday evening the second Quarterly Students' Recital, under direction of Hugh Williamson, Dean, took place in the auditorium of Flora Macdonald College before an appreciative audience. The piano, organ and violin departments of the conservatory were represented on the program, which was decidedly interesting and of wide range, from Bach to the moderns. Excellent musicianship was displayed throughout the program.

Miss Lena Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Stewart of Aberdeen, participated in the recital, playing Mendelssohn's Scherzo, Op. 16. A freshman in the Conservatory, Miss Stewart is a candidate for the Bachelor of Music degree in piano. She is a pupil of Mr. Hugh Williamson, dean, who has studied under Edwin Hughes, well known piano teacher of New York City.
