Peaches Return, Fat and Tanned, After Week of Swimming, Fishing and Eating

The American Legion Junior Baseball squad that went to Myrtle Beach on July 19th arrived back in town Monday evening, bronzed by their week at the shore and enthusiastic over their experiences. The trip to and from the beach was made comfortably enough by truck, accompanied by Ted Kennedy, who exercised general supervision over the boys, and by Ed Starnes, the genial proprietor of Ed's Cafe, to whom was entrusted the purchase, preparation and service of the meals. Owing to his experience the food was good, the diet balanced, the service prompt and the cooking excellent. The boys showed their appreciation in a practical manner by the enthusiasm with which they attacked their meals and by a gain in weight all around.

The cottage selected with the aid of Paul Barnum and W. S. Bushby was an elevated structure situated near the center of the town on Fourth Avenue, half a block from the beach and known by the forbidding name of "Bulldog Cottage." As a matter of fact images of two small bull dogs guarded the entrance and, by proxy at least, warned away intruders. The building was large and airy and the six beds that constituted a part of the equipment were supplemented with cots so that it was not necessary for anyone to sleep on the floor. Among the advantages of this particular location was the relatively unobstructed view afforded of practically the whole neighborhood, a view rendered still more effective by the frequent use of Ted Kennedy's field glasses.

By far the most popular recreation was bathing, but fishing, loafing, promenading on the boardwalk and calling on chance acquaintances proved popular also. Especially tireless fishermen were Ed Starnes and Ted Kennedy, whose seemingly un-failing catches provided a major portion of the daily menu. A victrola with numerous records, card tables and a baseball helped occupy the idle moments. In the evenings the boys scattered, straying to various places of amusement but true to directions returned in good time to the cottage. It was difficult to settle after so much excitement but eventually all would be quiet and the fresh sea air assured sound sleep.

Deep Sea Fishing

A visit from the treasurer of the Sandhills Junior Baseball Committee, E. Lewis Prizer, and Paul Blue about the middle of the week introduced some variations into the daily routine. Several of the boys very graciously gave up their room to the visitors and Dr. Prizer reciprocated by taking six of them deep sea fishing. Unfortunately it was necessary to drive twenty miles to Little River in order to find boat space and the car would carry only so many. The boys proved themselves good fishermen.
