A WOMAN'S PART IN DEFENSE

The great question among women during these days of crisis continues to be—what can we do to help make America strong?

As our great industrial system expands and production of materials for defense mounts the tempo of our national life quickens and we ourselves want more to do. We long to have some part in preparing this country for whatever role it will be called upon to play in world affairs.

But what should it be? What service can we render to this country that has made us the freest, most fortunate women in the world? Should we offer to work in the busy plants and factories? Should we take up training for some emergency? Or must we... just knit?

A few months ago no one seemed to know the answer, as women rushed about organizing new committees, writing feverish letters, talking endlessly to each other. But today individual leaders and organizations are beginning to agree on what women should do for their country today. It's not exciting but it's fundamental and its effects will be far reaching.

Stay put, they're saying. Don't do any more organizing or flag waving or talking. But first, make an even better home for your husband and children. Feed them so they'll be well and strong. Instill in your children the love of freedom. Iron out family difficulties so home will be the best place in the world. And, second take a more active part in your own community government and affairs.

This is the advice of such organizations as the Parent-Teachers' Association and the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and of outstanding women. But what sort of community activities, you ask?

Take this vexing question of government spending that has reached such undreamt-of proportions today. If the women of each community in the United States get together and bring about a saving of even 10 percent in local spending there would be a saving of millions of dollars for the country as a whole, because in normal times more than half of our tax money is spent in local, county and state governments.

And take our belief in the democratic system of government that is under fire today. We can't change the world but we can see that everyone in our community, children and foreign-born especially, realize how important it is for us to keep our free press and free radio—our right to go to church where and as we like—our system of electing the people who run our government and our time proved system of free enterprise in business. If enough communities discover what Democracy really means and make it work better than ever, then the nation as a whole will be safe from all inroads against freedom and we shall be able to pass our "ancient liberties" on intact to our children.
