Early Fall Months Dangerous Season For Hog Cholera

Farmers are warned to guard against the danger of outbreaks of hog cholera in the hazardous months of early fall.

This is one of the seasons of greatest danger from hog cholera the American Foundation for Animal Health declared. Livestock men were advised to keep a close watch on their swine droves and have all pigs vaccinated early.

Vaccination, along with sound sanitation practices and proper feeding, constitute the best safeguards for a sure pig crop, the Foundation pointed out.

Because infection can be spread by a hog coming down with cholera, even before pronounced symptoms appear, hog raisers were urged to keep a close watch on their droves for signs of fever, loss of appetite, or weakness.

"If evidence of illness appears, suspect cholera first," the Foundation statement said, "and have a veterinarian make a diagnosis at once.

"In the meantime, if pigs have not been vaccinated, it is wise to have this done immediately, making sure, first, that they are in condition to receive the immunization.

"If cholera does break out in the neighborhood, quarantine for at least two weeks any new livestock brought to the farm. And if it occurs on the farm, notify neighbors so they can take precautionary measures."

Don't learn the traffic rules by accident, says the National Safety Council.

Accidental deaths to workers on the job totalled 16,000 in 1945. Accidents to workers away from their jobs totalled 29,000, almost twice the on-job total, the National Safety Council reports.

Of all sad words in sound or ink,

The saddest are: "I didn't think."

Defective or over-heated heating equipment caused 60,000 fires in 1944. Check that furnace before winter comes, warns the National Safety Council.

Rototiller in Operation

The new Rototiller farm machine, produced by Graham-Palge Motors in the giant Willow Run plant, prepares soil for planting in a single operation, making unnecessary the three operations of plow, disk and harrow. The five-horsepower tillage unit, which churns and crumbles the soil to a depth of nine inches, has attachments which adapt it to a score of other farm tasks such as bulldozing, seeding, mowing, snowplowing and other operations
