Educo Club Plans Enlargement Of County Audiometer

Invitation Issued For Tournament To Be Held Here

The addition of parts to the audiometer, to test the hearing of a whole class at once instead of just one child at a time, is being considered as this year's project of the Educo club.

The audiometer was purchased last year by the club, composed of all men principals and teachers of the county, for use in all the schools under supervision of the county health department. It is used to detect hearing deficiencies in schoolchildren. Often before they, their parents or teachers are aware that there is anything wrong. The club gift made Moore one of the few counties in the state to own its own audiometer.

The project was discussed at the last meeting of the club, held at Carthage, December 14. Dr. Amos Abrams, editor of the State Education magazine, was guest speaker at the meeting, on "How Stand We Now in Public Education?" Summarizing helpful legislation of the 1949 General Assembly, and accomplishments noted since that time, Dr. Abrams said, "We have come far—but still have far to go."

Invitation was extended by the Southern Pines members, P. I. Weaver and A. C. Dawson, Jr., for the holding of the Educo-sponsored Moore County Basketball tournament in the new Southern Pines gymnasium. Dates of the tournament, classic windup of the basketball season for all schools of the county, March 1, 2, 3, 6 and 7.

R. C. Fields, Aberdeen district principal, is president of the Educo club this year.

Everybody's Kin in Carolina, Says Editor Graves After Trip To Moore

By Louis Graves

"Everybody seems to be kin to everybody else in North Carolina" is a remark that has been made by many a visitor to the state. In an article that Jonathan Daniels wrote for the magazine, Holiday, last year he said "North Carolina is a state of cousins." It is also a state of friendly chatty people who, if you will only stop to listen, will give you all the interesting facts about everybody in town.

My wife and I like not to decide beforehand, when we go on a vacation, where we're going to stop for the night. We just stop when and where the fancy strikes us. We saw the sign "Tourists" before a big white house in Carthage, and we both exclaimed upon what a nice looking place it was. Magnolias, mossy brick walks, a latticed summer house in the yard.

I rang the doorbell, then beat on the door. Nobody answered. A man appeared on the porch of the house next door. I introduced myself. He told me that his name was Hyman and that he was from Halifax county, and in a minute we were talking about Bob House and Bob Madry and Quentin Gregory and George Green. Then he explained why the big white house was empty. The maid must have gone out on an errand, and Mrs. Lee was down at the store helping Mr. Lee.

I went to the store and found Mrs. Lee, and she said I could walk right upstairs and take either of the two rooms on the east side, and please make myself at home. Presently I was in spacious and comfortable quarters. It turned out that the Lees were the proprietors of the Lee store in Chapel Hill (one of a chain).

We drove over to Southern Pines and took our folding chairs from the car and sat in a little park in the quiet of a Sunday morning. A car stopped; somebody waved to us from the car window; and a moment later we were being greeted by my cousin, Mrs. George Heinitsh (the former Miss Nellie Graves, who used to teach in the Chapel Hill school) and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Henry Graves. As we were about to start back to Carthage we met Fred Weaver on the street.

In the drugstore on the courthouse square I asked, Saturday night, if I could get a newspaper there in the morning. The proprietor said he didn't keep open on Sunday, but, if I would give him my name, he'd have a paper marked for me and left on the shelf outside the store. When I gave him my name, he said: "We've got a Graves family here in Carthage." I told him they were cousins of mine and that I was going to call on them.

Midwinter Horse Show Winners At Pinehurst Listed

The 13th annual Mid-Winter Junior Horse Show, an informal event, was held over the Christmas and New Year's holidays in the riding ring of the Carolina hotel, Pinehurst.

Two afternoons were needed to dispose of the classes in which were entered a number of top ranking riders and horses, some of them winners in the National Horse show at Madison Square Garden. Among notable stables represented were Michael Walsh's Stoneybrook stables, Southern Pines; Starland stables of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Tate, Jr., Pinehurst and Blowing Rock; Lakelawn stables owned by Dwight W. Winkelman, of Syracuse, N. Y., and Southern Pines; Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Moss's Mileaway stables, and the Pinehurst, Alexander and Tate stables of Pinehurst.

Judging was Mrs. Fred Wilmshurst, of Hasty, N. C.; ringmaster was A. Corbett Alexander, Pinehurst, and in charge of arrangements was Dennis Crotty, Pinehurst equestrian sports director.

Open Jumping—1, Joan Walsh on Red Fox; 2, Lloyd Tate, Jr., on Scotch and Soda; 3, Billy Tate on Nylon; 4, Kathleen Walsh on Grey Jacket.

Special prizes to first place winners were donated by the Carolina, Berkshire and aMnor hotels, the Holly Inn, Pinehurst Country club, Carolina Chambers, Mid-Pines club, Pinehurst, Inc., and John G. Hemmer.

Good Little Girl Gets Wrong Dose

Some children have to be forced to take their castor oil but Janice Holliday, aged 10, is a good little girl who takes her medicine by herself. Because of this fact, however, she suffered badly last Thursday night and also gave her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Holliday of Pinedene, a severe fright. In dosing herself, Janice reached for the wrong bottle and took camphorated instead of castor oil. Some time later she complained of feeling ill, then fell in a death-like faint. Her parents rushed her to St. Joseph of the Pines hospital, where a physician was called. It was some time before he could determine what had happened to the child.

After a night of illness Janice was much better and was allowed to go home the next day. She was soon completely recovered and went back to school Monday.
