the Arthur Godfrey-Kate Smith television show, and Mitzie Joyce, ballet dancer extraordinary straight from an engagement at the Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y.

Music is provided by Dave Lester and His Orchestra, recently featured at the Latin Casino in Boston and the Latin Quarter, Miami.

The Dunes Club is located on the Midland road, between Southern Pines and Pinehurst.

Dickie Renegar Makes Friends With Korean "Shoeshine Boys" By Mail

Letters Exchanged Through Brother Stationed Overseas

Dickie Renegar, 12 years old, liked hearing about Korea in letters from his brother, Pfc. Elmer Renegar, Jr., and best of all he liked to hear about the "shoeshine boys"—Korean lads close to his own age, waifs of war who clustered about the camps and did odd jobs for the soldiers.

Elmer wrote him about two in particular he called "Hank" and "Happy," though their Korean names were quite different. Hank was tall, Happy was short. They had had tough breaks in life because of the war, but they remained cheerful, and were very helpful, and eager to be friends. Dickie would like them fine, Elmer thought.

So not long ago Dick, a seventh grade student, sat down and wrote them some friendly notes. This week he had their answers, enclosed with a letter from his brother. Elmer had read them. Dick's letters through his interpreter, he said, and the boys answered the same way with the interpreter writing in English what they dictated in Korean.

The interpreter had a little trouble with the language but despite that the messages are clear, and Dick's new friends are seen as having tastes quite similar to American boys of the same age. Football gets a vote, and so does fishing, though "last year I could not fishing because it is war time." Each boy signed his name in Korean:

From "Hank":

"Dear friend, I had your letter yesterday evening. I think very thanks for your letter. I have heard you before from your brother. I like your brother because he is very kindness. I am 15 years old. And I like to play football. I am very intention to see to see you if I can. But it is very far from here

Collision At Cameron May Be Last; "Cloverleaf" Will Eliminate Hazard

What may be the last accident to take place at one of the state's most dangerous intersections—or one of the last, at any rate—was a collision last Saturday afternoon on US Highway 1 where it is entered by NC 27 at Cameron.

Materials are already on the ground for the construction of a "cloverleaf" overpass by which traffic may flow safely from one of these important traffic arteries into the other.

The accident occurred when Sgt. Samuel R. Bower, 35, of Fort Bragg emerged from NC 27 and turned south on Highway 1 just in time to collide with a north-bound car. The second car was driven by William T. Bird, Morven school superintendent, who had his wife with him. No one was hurt but the impact knocked both cars a considerable distance and damaged each to the extent of several hundred dollars. According to the State Highway Patrol report, no one was found at fault, as Sergeant Bower had stopped and signaled correctly, and neither car was going too fast. However, neither could see the other coming until too late to avoid a crash.

The "cloverleaf" overpass, it is believed, will be the first on any North Carolina highway. It was hastened along by the fact that NC 27 is now a main road into Fort Bragg, carrying much traffic and destined to carry more, including Army convoys. Many accidents have taken place there in past years, including several fatal ones. The intersection has lately been widened and remodeled but is still partially "blind."

Saturday Night, Feb. 23

Though scarcely six months out of their Richmond, Virginia habitat, these four men have already tasted their entree to musical stardom. Critics in every section of the country have acclaimed them the most refreshing unit to come before the public since King Cole first stirred audiences with his exciting renditions.

Although not generally known, Littlejohn is the original creator of the Slam Stewart type of bass playing. He is credited with having "sung along with his solos" long before the Stewart version caught public fancy.
