Tom Cole, Carthage Native, Honored For Long Service To Eastern Growers

Veteran Marketing Chief, Now Retired, Returns To Moore

Tom Cole, native of Carthage, who has now returned there to live, was recently presented a certificate of life membership in the Federal and State Inspectors' association of America, with an Award of Merit for his outstanding work in the association, and for the Fruit and Vegetable Inspection Service, over many years.

Mr. Cole retired in February as Chief of the Division of Markets with the Clemson College Extension Service in South Carolina, after almost 40 years in agricultural, marketing and inspection work.

He is given a major share of the credit for improvement of the commercial pack of peaches, sweet potatoes and vegetables in the southeastern states, and in promotion of legislation which set up the South Carolina Marketing Commission. He assisted the Commission in setting up the famous and modern Columbia market, an outstanding outlet for farmers and wholesalers of the eastern seaboard.

In 1948 Mr. Cole received the Progressive Farmer's "Man of the Year" award. Many other honors have come to him, climaxed by the recognition accorded by the Federal and State Inspectors Association at its annual meeting. Membership of the association, numbering 375 from states of the eastern seaboard, gave unanimous expression to regrets at the loss of his active services, with best wishes for enjoyment of his well-earned retirement.

Mr. Cole graduated from N. C. State college in 1913. During World War 1 he became one of Uncle Sam's early wartime pilots, serving overseas. Following his release from the Army Air Force he was for several years a county agent, then entered the Fruit and Vegetable Inspection Service, working in states from Florida to New York.

In 1930 he became assistant chief of the Division of Markets at Clemson college, receiving his promotion to chief in 1939.
