

New Highway Maps Of North Carolina Ready For Public

The new State Highway Commission maps which have been revised to 1954 are off the press and ready for distribution, according to Highway Chairman A. H. Graham.

The maps, which are free, have been printed in black and white. There have been several changes since the last black and white highway maps were printed in 1951. The new map has a panel on the reverse side with detail sketches of eight of the largest Tar Heel cities showing the streets over which US and NC primary highways have been routed. Another panel gives the size and weight laws of the State regarding trucks. Penalties for truck weight overloading are clearly spelled out.

There is a new illustrated panel on highway safety which explains the use of radar by the State Highway Patrol to apprehend speeders, saturation (on various Tar Heel highways, identified as particularly hazardous, dozens of State troopers are occasionally massed to conduct closely integrated patrols), and unmarked cars. Not every North Carolina patrol car is easily identified as such. To apprehend the wilful speeder and other violators about one third of the patrol's fleet appears on the highway in various colors. The trooper, of course, is in full uniform.

The schedules of the free ferries operated by the State Highway Commission at Oregon Inlet, Sandy Point-East Lake, Atlantic-Ocracoke, and Hatteras-Ocracoke Island have been condensed as the schedules are subject to slight changes due to traffic volume and weather conditions. There is an index to cities and towns and points of interest. The "rules of the road" are clearly explained.

On the front or map side there is a mileage chart which gives the distance by miles between cities and points of interest.

Graham said that 10,000 of the new black and white highway maps had been printed. The colored tourist map outlining the principal highways in red with
