Alston House Progress Told In New Report

Plans For Project Call For Raising Added Funds Later

In a report to members and friends of the Moore County Historical Association, Norris L. Hodgkins, Jr., finance chairman, notes total contributions of $2,751 toward the Alston House project in Deep River township.

A loan of $2,500 from the North Carolina Society for the Preservation of Antiquities was combined with $2,500 of contributed funds to pay the $5,000 purchase price for the historic house and four acres of land surrounding it. The property was bought from Glenn Hancock, of Bonlee. Total contributed funds were $2,751.

The house was the site of a Revolutionary War skirmish. The Alfred Moore Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, joined with the Historical Association in the appeal for funds to use in connection with the restoration project.

Money Not Available

The purchase of the house with the contributed funds and the loan from the Society for the Preservation of Antiquities was decided upon when it was learned that State money for the purchase would not be available until approved by the General Assembly that convenes in January, 1955.

The report from Mr. Hodgkins explains that if and when the $5,000 is made available for the project by the state, the property would be conveyed from the Historical Association to the State and the association would be reimbursed for the purchase price.

As reported soon afterwards in The Pilot, the property was transferred from Mr. Hancock to the Historical Association June 18.

Purchase of the property by the State has been approved, it is understood, by the State Historic Sites Commission. Mrs. Ernest L. Ives of Southern Pines, a leader in the activities of the Historical Association, is a member of the commission.

Operation and maintenance of the property, after it is acquired by the State, will be a local responsibility, Mr. Hodgkins states. Reimbursement of the purchase price by the State would make funds for maintenance available. The report says that George Maurice of Eagle Springs, a member of the Association and leader in the Alston House project, estimates immediate needed repairs on the house as costing $2,000. The Association is making plans to raise additional funds for the project later, the report states.

Appreciation is expressed in the report to Highway Commissioner Forrest Lockey of Aberdeen for work that has begun on a road to the house. A parking lot will be constructed later, the report says.

Huntley, Phillips Head Plans For Annual Kids Day

With W. T. Huntley of Southern Pines and T. Roy Phillips of Carthage in charge of arrangements, the Sandhills Kiwanis Club is planning the annual Kids Day program September 25.

Again this year, the club will be assisted by the USAF Air-Ground School in putting on the event. Air Force installations over the nation cooperate with Kiwanis Clubs in presenting Kids Day programs.

The event is open to all pupils in the county schools, some 500 of whom participate annually. Committees have been named by the two chairmen.
