New Teachers of County Honored at Reception in Carthage

An informal reception for new teachers of the Moore County school system was held last Thursday afternoon at the Carthage school cafeteria in connection with the first meeting of the Moore County Classroom Teachers Association for the school year 1955-56.

All the new teachers were in the receiving line, headed by officers of the Association and Supt. H. Lee Thomas, with Mrs. Thomas, Teachers who had already served one or more years passed down the line extending greetings. All wore name-tags in the form of colorful autumn leaves cut from paper.

Punch and cookies were served from a table decorated with an arrangement of yellow pompon chrysanthemums and blue ageratum. The cafeteria tables also bore bright arrangements of autumn flowers and leaves, giving a festive air to the gathering. Almost all of the 228 teachers in the county system were present.

Mrs. Shields Cameron of Southern Pines, a teacher in the Vass-Lakeview school, president of the Moore County unit, led the meeting, which opened with an invocation by John McCrummen, Vass-Lakeview principal.

After a welcome, Mrs. Cameron called on Miss Lucile Eifort of West End to give the history of the organization, which was formed in Moore County in 1947 as a unit of the state association, organized in 1932.

Raleigh Doctor

Dr. Dameron is a young man, quiet, careful, intensely interested. To see him making his examination, coaxing a child to sit up on to walk while he watches, watches for the turned-in foot, the slight drag of a step, the sag of a hip, to see his concentration, is to know he is all doctor. And to see him working with a frightened youngster, putting a cast on the twitching arm of a spastic girl, explaining to a Negro mother and father how they must take care of their frail son, is to think: is there anyone finer than a good doctor!

Howling Cherubs

The health center's outer office seemed to have a lot of people in it Tuesday but when you came to look you saw that only about half of them were patients. The others were the parents, most of whom looked more worried than the children. These were of all ages. They ranged from the baby with the slightly clubbed foot, to the slim young teenager, the spastic, with the clear skin and big brown eyes of a dray, afflicted with one of the cruelest of illnesses. Some had braces on their thin legs in the long struggle of recovery from polio.

Handicapped Children Given Best Of Attention At Monthly County Clinic

Orthopedic Experts Visit Carthage To Diagnose Ailments

Every fourth Tuesday in the month is Crippled Children's Day at the Moore County health center.

But that is putting it rather bleakly. Actually, "crippled" is too drastic a designation. Though some who come to the public health clinic in Carthage that day are severely handicapped, with only slim hope of improvement, the great majority are babies and children who have minor defects, most of them remedial.

Taking the clinic this Tuesday was Dr. T. B. Dameron. Dr. Dameron comes to Carthage every month and, once every four months, his colleague, Dr. Hugh Thompson, comes down. These two orthopedic surgeons of Raleigh carry on this work for the state, with the Moore County clinic but one among many they attend throughout the state.

The doctor is assisted by a team consisting of a nurse, Miss Elizabeth Moore, a nutritionist, Miss Asenath Cooke, and a physiotherapist, Miss Anne Parish also on duty Tuesday and ready to help where needed were several of Moore County's health department staff: Miss Mary Sweet, Mrs. Kinney Poe, Mrs. Worth McLeod. Mrs. Sallie McLean was handling the registrations, while the health officer, Dr. J. W. Willcox, and Miss Annie McKeithen were carrying on the usual office work of the department.
